FIGHTING NEAR PARIS.

Another Great Battle in Progress on Saturday—Peasants Operating in Rear of the Prussians.

BEAUVAIS, Sept. 24, via TOURS, Sept. 25.—A great battle raged all day yesterday between Pontoise and Isle Adam.

CUTTING OFF PRUSSIAN SUPPLIES.

It is reported that the peasants are cutting off convoys of supplies in the rear of the Prussians.

ANOTHER DISPATCH.

BEAUVAIS, Sept. 24.—An extensive engagement was fought all day yesterday, between Pointoise and Isleadam. Considerable numbers of fugitives arrived in this department. The inhabitants of Oise are rapidly arming, and an encounter is announced between some peasants and a Prussian convoy.

THE SITUATION IN PARIS.

Prussian Tales of Fighting in the City Discredited—The National Guard Interested in Preserving Order—Communication by Balloon—Discipline Enforced and Vigilance Observed—Guarding Against Surprise.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The Reuter telegram which gave a report of the cannonading in the streets of Paris is discredited here, as are also the stories about the pillaging of the residences of persons absent from the French capital.

There is too large a force of the National Guard in Paris, interested in the preservation of order, for the socialists to venture to resort to arms.

It is quite natural that the Prussians should invent such stories as these, to operate on the mind of the rest of France, in order to induce submission. E.

A MINISTERIAL NOTE ON THE SUBJECT.

TOURS, Sept. 25.—Ministers GAMBETTA and FERRY have addressed the following note from Paris to M. CHEMMEUX, Minister of Justice:

"Paris is prepared to make a heroic resistance. All parties have united to sustain with energy the Government of Defense. Should you hear through Prussian dispatches that troubles have broken out in Paris, deny it. We have enormous forces of the National and Mobile Guards and troops of the line, with munitions and provisions enough to hold out all Winter. Let France make a heroic effort!"

THE PRUSSIAN STORIES REPEATED.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The Prussians report that from a height overlooking Paris, they have observed that fighting was going on in the streets with cannon and musketry. Advices received by way of Chartres attempt to discredit the report, but a later dispatch from Brussels, dated Saturday evening, asserts that there have been constant combats since Friday, in Paris, between the "Reds" and the troops under Gen. TROCHU. No further particulars are given.

COMMUNICATION BY BALLOON.

TOURS, Sept. 25.—They have commenced sending mails from Paris by balloon. The Constitutionnel publishes a note received by this means which confesses that the city is completely surrounded, and says communication with the outside world can only be had by balloons, one of which will be sent out every week.

EXPERIENCE OF AN AERONAUT.

A person who left Paris in a balloon descended safely at Evreux, and has arrived in this city. The Prussians discovered him, and fired at him with muskets and cannon. Some of the shots came so near that they caused his car to vibrate. A package of letters from the Government at Paris to the Ministers stationed here was brought by this bold voyager, who says he will attempt to return to Paris as he left it, and that others will leave the city in the same way.

APPREHENDED SURPRISE.

Great vigilance is maintained in the defense of Paris, and rigid discipline is enforced among the troops garrisoning the walls. At several points strong electric lights are used to guard against a surprise, which is evidently contemplated by the Prussians, as they are making a large number of scaling ladders. Near Fort Montrouge there was a large house behind which the Prussians commenced to build a redoubt. The Breton Mobiles made a night sortie, and after a hand-to-hand fight with the Prussians, tore down the house. Several of the enemy were killed. Other buildings, likely to give shelter to the Germans, have been battered down by cannon.

GERMAN HEAD-QUARTERS.

The commanders of the German forces investing Paris have stationed their head-quarters as follows: The King at Meaux, Prince ALBRECHT at Brunoy, the Crown Prince of Prussia at Fontainebleau, the Crown Prince of Saxony at Beaujas, Gen. VON FALKENSTEIN at Choisy-le-Roi.

THE FORTIFICATIONS.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 25.—Improvements have been made in the fortifications of Paris under the direction of the American Gen. RIFLEY. There was a weak space between Forts St. Denis and Mont Valerien, which Gen. RIFLEY has protected by an elaborate system of mines, torpedoes, &c.

Return of the Rabble—Murders and Robberies in Open Day—The People Revolting.

[The following appeared in the Sunday edition of the TIMES:]

LONDON, Sept. 24.—A Paris letter of the 20th, received to-day, says that sheds, to serve as temporary barracks, were in course of erection on the Boulevards for the troops, but are still incomplete. The French officer of the guard remarked bitterly: "This is how they do things in France; instead of working night and day, we are never prepared but are always too late, until the Prussians surprise us."

The districts of Belleville, La Chappelle, and La Villette present a most uninviting appearance. Throughout the boulevards of those names every rough I passed carried a fusee, a strange sight in Paris, where within a few weeks weapons of any kind were forbidden, except by special permit of M. PIETRI. Even sword-canes and knuckle-dusters were carried stealthily by respectable wayfarers for protection against thieves and garroters in those purlieus, where at the present moment we sleep with Chassepots and sit by the side of bayonets. Every ruffian can obtain a weapon for the trouble of asking for it. This state of affairs creates deep apprehensions throughout the city.

MURDERS AND ROBBERIES.

The State Prison birds and marauders are already beginning to show their teeth. Three days ago a member of the Garde Mobile, while drinking in a wine-shop, exposed a fifty franc note, and was followed and robbed and murdered in broad daylight. Within the enceinte, yesterday, two non-commissioned officers were stabbed at 3 o'clock in the afternoon by two miscreants. In the outskirts burglaries are committed with impunity. The days are shortening and the nights growing chilly. Provisions are gradually increasing in price. Crime will soon stalk with giant strides. The people are reveling full of enjoyment in their own majesty, and take every opportunity for exhibiting their might. The antipathy to imperialism on one hand, and the dread of the Prussians on the other, cause much uneasiness to well-disposed citizens.

TERROR OF THE MOB.

A few days ago two ladies on the balcony of a house in the Rue Lafayette were admiring the passing Mobile heroes, when suddenly the mob discovered a plate of the "Eagle Insurance Company" on the top of the balcony, which bears the impression of the Imperial bird. Instantly cries were raised of "A bas l'aigle!" Groans, hisses, and menaces followed; the ignorant rabble evidently believed the plate to be the Imperial insignia. To the terror of the ladies an attack was made on the house, but the damage was confined to the breaking of the rails and wrenching off of the plate with points of bayonets.

THE RECENT ENGAGEMENTS.

Yesterday Gen. DUCROT, with three divisions, attacked the Prussians in the woods of Verrieres, Clamart and Meudon. Part of the French force, especially the cuirassiers, pushed forward too quickly, and were surprised by the Prussians, who inflicted severe loss. Confusion was the result. One battalion of the Garde Mobile were thrown into tremor and fired into their own Sixteenth Regiment of the line, posted as skirmishers, and a general retreat commenced. The Prussians established artillery on the heights and opened fire. The French regiments, composed chiefly of reserves and recruits, retired, and became sauve qui peut until protected by the guns of Fort Montrouge. The troops under the command of D. SUGNES and CAUSSADE behaved discreditably; those under DUCROT behaved well, under fire. The Seventh Battalion of the Garde Mobile behaved splendidly. Plateau Meudon is now occupied by the Prussians.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Failure of the Mission of Jules Favre—A War of Extermination the Alternative—Russia Approves of the Terms Dictated by Prussia—M. Thiers' Mission.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The failure of the peace negotiations, owing to France's declining the conditions demanded or offered by Prussia, has led to the revival of the project for a European Congress by the Continental correspondents of the London journals.

This idea is sheer nonsense. Prussia will permit no intervention in the settlement of the conditions of peace.

If the negotiations really have failed, the only alternative left is a war of extermination. R.

BERLIN, Sept 25.—A conference was held between Count VON BISMARCK and M. JULES FAVRE on Monday and Tuesday. It was devoted wholly to an attempt to arrange a truce pending the meeting of the Constituent Assembly. Count BISMARCK exacted the surrender of Strasbourg, Toul and Verdun, in order that the communications of the German forces might be secure from danger during the truce.

FAILURE OF THE NEGOTIATIONS.

The French Minister declined these reasonable conditions. No demand was made for the surrender of the fortress of Mont Valerien, near Paris.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The journals published at TOURS concur in acknowledging that M. FAVRE's mission to the Prussian head-quarters has proved abortive, and declare that the French people prefer extinction to humiliation. Strasbourg, Toul and Verdun the Germans already consider theirs, and demand that they shall remain so.

But M. FAVRE and his colleagues in the Provisional Government are a unit in the rejection of such demands.

EFFECT ON THE STOCK MARKET.

FRANKFORT, Sept. 25.—The news from Tours of the failure of peace negotiations has a depressing influence on business here. American Securities are heavy and declining. Five-twenties are quoted at 84@84¼.

EFFECT AMONG THE PEOPLE.

TOURS, Sept. 25.—Advices from departments shows that the proclamation announcing the breaking off of negotiations and the postponement of the meeting of the Constituent Assembly is well received, and the people on all sides cry for arms.

PRUSSIA NOT THE FINAL ARBITER.

Should any terms be reached they must have the sanction of a European Congress, which would meet at Brussels.

NO PEACE ON THE TERMS OFFERED.

La France says peace is impossible on the terms proposed by Prussia, without ruin and shame. Nothing is left us now but to make a dogged resistance.

MONT VALERIEN.

Dispatches from Berlin repudiate the intention on the part of Germany of permanently retaining the fort of Mont Valerien as a menace to Paris.

ATTITUDE OF RUSSIA.

The Journal of St. Petersburg denies that the Neutral Powers encourage the obstinacy of France, and declares that Russia approves the terms dictated by Prussia.

MISSION OF M. THIERS.

M. THIERS, after a protracted interview with Baron VON RUDER, left Vienna for St. Petersburg, on Saturday.

Bismarck Refused to Treat Except for an Armistice—German Ideas of French Resistance—Sacrifices Since Sedan Unnecessary.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—Gen. WIMPFFEN's statement, published in the Indépendance Belge, is considered as having given the coup de grace to the Napoleonic dynasty.

He makes it perfectly clear that the Emperor did not court death at the head of his troops, as he asserted, and that he sacrificed the last chances of escape for the army to his personal safety.

IMPERIAL SPECULATION IN REAL ESTATE.

The stories actively circulated of the Imperial poverty and unselfishness are indorsed by the London Times. They are all humbug, however. There is a certain American, until recently employed about the court, who could, if he would, reveal startling secrets about the large operations in which the Empress, through his aid, engaged with Baron HAUSSMANN, Ex-Prefect of the Seine, and in which all three made large sums, in connection with the expropriation of property and buildings during the era of improvement in Paris. Personally the Ex-Emperor may be poor, but the Empress and the Prince Imperial are splendidly provided for. E.

EUGENIE IGNORED BY VICTORIA.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—It is reported that the Empress EUGENIE and the Prince Imperial have removed from Hastings to Chiselhurst, where a house has been hired for them. Queen VICTORIA wholly ignores the illustrious exiles.

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

A Letter from Earl Russell—Arms and Coal Not Contraband—Armed Men and Armed Ships Manned Alone Should be Stopped—The Privileges of Neutrals.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—Earl RUSSELL has addressed a letter to the Social Science Congress, which was read yesterday.

He maintains the doctrine of contraband of war laid down by WASHINGTON, that troops, armed and organized, and ships armed and manned, ought not to be permitted to leave neutral ports.

Beyond these limits Earl RUSSELL would not go. Arms and coal he does not consider contraband of war. E.

OTHER POINTS.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—Earl RUSSELL, in a letter declining the chair of an international law and social science gathering, states that America, and afterward England, abandoned the doctrine that armed ships-of-war and enlisted troops should be prohibited from leaving neutral States, but the result caused complaints, which the conflicts of nations rendered perfectly possible. The obligations of neutrals should be diminished rather than increased.

"During the present struggle," said the Earl, "arms have been sent to one of the belligerents, and coals have been sent to the other. We should go no further than to stop armed troops and ships, armed and manned, from leaving the country."

The letter, in short, urges that the doctrine of President WASHINGTON should be made the law of nations.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Captures by the Prussians at Toul—The French Government to Remain at Tours to the Last—A Levy En Masse—Sympathy for France in England.

BERLIN, Sept. 25.—An official dispatch dated Ferrieres, Saturday, says that by the capitulation of Toul there fell into our hands 109 officers, 2,240 men, 120 horses, an eagle, 197 guns, including 48 rifled cannon, 3,000 rifles, 3,000 sabres, and 300 cuirasses. Large supplies of ammunition, bombs, and other war material were also surrendered.

DEFENSIVE MEASURES OF THE FRENCH.

TOURS, Sept. 25.—The Government of National Defense will remain at Tours to the last.

They intend to issue a decree for a levy en masse. Throughout Brittany the voluntary uprising is general. In Tours all men have commenced drilling.

The Radical Council at Lyons has been permitted to use the red flag, until new national colors are adopted by the National Government.

AID FROM ITALY AND SPAIN FOR FRANCE.

Large bodies of Italian volunteers are collecting at Marseilles.

MADRID, Sept. 25.—Senor ORESUS left today for Tours. After conference with the French authorities, he will return to Spain to organize a battalion of Spanish volunteers to aid France.

NO FRENCH SYMPATHY IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—A meeting was held here last night to express sympathy for France, but it proved a failure. Few people attended, and no orators of note were present.

THE FRENCH STEAM-SHIP LINE.

The French Transatlantic Steam-ship Company has now established its head-quarters at St. Nazaire, but it will dispatch its steamers from Havre to New-York via Cowes.

The Proclamation of the Provisional Government.

TOURS, Sept. 24—P. M.—The following news is official:

Proclamation to France:

Before the siege of Paris, JULES FAVRE desired to see Count VON BISMARCK, to know the intentions of the enemy. The following is the declaration of the enemy:

Prussia wishes to continue the war in order to reduce France to a second-rate Power. Prussia demands Alsace and Lorraine as far as Metz, by right of conquest. Prussia, before consenting to an armistice, demands the rendition of Strasbourg, Toul and Mont Valerien. Paris is exasperated, and will rather bury herself beneath her ruins. To such insolent pretensions we can respond but by resistance to the last extremity. France accepts the struggle, and counts upon her children.

(Signed,) CREMIEUX,
GLAIS-BIZOIN,
FOURICHON.

THE ELECTIONS SUSPENDED.

The Government has issued decrees that all the municipal elections, as well as those for the Constituent Assembly, be suspended and adjourned, and all municipal elections which have been effected annulled. The Prefects will maintain the municipalities, or, in their inability to serve, appoint others.

Schleswig-Holstein Again—The Treaty of Prague.

KIEL, Sept. 24.—The Municipal Council at Hadersleben has voted an address to the King of Prussia to remove the ban which weighs on the north of Schleswig by virtue of the fifth paragraph of the Treaty of Prague. The Council at Kiel has resolved to present an address to the King, expressing a hope that the success of the German arms will lead to the abrogation of the Treaty of Prague, which stipulates the cession of a portion of Schleswig to Denmark, adding that the Schleswig-Holsteiners never wished to separate the destinies of their Northern brethren.

CITY WAR NEWS.

France-Irish Demonstration at Williamsbridge.

Pursuant to notice, the Patriotic Aid Society of Williamsbridge, under the presidency of Mr. A. WARNER, had a grand demonstration and picnic at Bellevue Park, near the station, for the relief of the wounded soldiers and the widows and orphans of those who have fallen in the cause of France against Germany. By 3 o'clock P. M. there were several thousand persons on the ground, probably one-third or one-fourth of whom were French, principally from New-York. On their arrival, a cannon, which was taken from the British by Gen. HARRISON at the battle of Tippecanoe, in 1812, thundered a welcome. About 5,000 tickets were sold, the entire proceeds of which are to be forwarded to France by the Finance Committee. The speakers' stand and the entrance to the grounds were decorated with French, Irish and American flags. The meeting was called to order by Mr. MCBRIDE, a prominent citizen of Williamsbridge, who stated that Mr. A. WARNER would preside, and Messrs. SAVAGE, MULLALLY, WARNER and GAUDENS would address the assemblage on the occasion.

Mr. JOHN SAVAGE made a speech in which he referred to the instances in which France had offered an asylum for the Irish, saying that at one time no less than 450,000 Irish had entered the service of France, and that 150,000 Irishmen had died in battle defending France, and when famine prevailed in Ireland some years ago, the French came to the rescue of dear old Ireland. In the course of his remarks Mr. SAVAGE concluded by offering the following resolutions:

Resolved, By the citizens assembled at the France-Irish and American demonstration, held at Williamsbridge, Westchester County, N. Y., Sunday, Sept. 25, 1870, That we hail the establishment of the French Republic with feelings of heartiest congratulation, and sincerely pray that the God of Freedom may vouchsafe stability of purpose to the people of France, harmony in the councils of its rulers, and that wisdom in the administration of her affairs in this terrible crisis, so that the Republic born in the throes of national agony may be perpetuated to enjoy the blessings of liberty and peace.

Resolved, That the heroic devotion of the soldiers who rose to preserve the integrity of their native France against overwhelming numbers of invaders is worthy of the purest and best of their military nation; and that their unparalleled persistence in defense of their hearths and homes under the most adverse circumstances, must command the respect, admiration and sympathy of overthrow people.

Resolved, That while commemorating the sacrifices of the soldiers who fell or are fighting for France, we meet sincerely and deeply sympathize with the wounded, and with the widows and orphans of the French Republic; in testimony whereof, be it further

Resolved, That the pecuniary results of this France-Irish and American demonstration be placed in the hands of the Consul-General of France at New-York, to be transmitted by him to the proper authorities in France for the relief of said wounded soldiers, widows and orphans; and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to said donation.

The resolutions were enthusiastically indorsed by the assemblage.

A French gentleman named GAUDENS followed with a brief but very animated speech in French, in which he explained to the French citizens present the purport of Mr. SAVAGE's remarks and resolutions, together with some of his own views on the present state of affairs in France. At the close of his remarks the band struck up the "Marseillaise," and the French united in a grand chorus, with great effect.

Mr. MULLALLY next addressed the meeting, and related many interesting facts connected with the past history of France and Ireland, which made a deep impression upon those present, and elicited the wildest enthusiasm.

THE NATHAN MURDER.

Another False Trail Struck.

Arrest of the Self-Accused Murderer—A Singular Chain of Circumstances—What the Prisoner Has to Say for Himself.

The mystery attending the murder of Mr. BENJAMIN NATHAN on the 29th of July, in Twenty-third-street, which brutal crime created so profound an impression in this City, appears to get deeper and deeper as the weeks roll by. The efforts of the Police, headed by their indefatigable Superintendent, Mr. JOURDAN, have as yet reached no definite result, except, indeed, to throw the head of the Department on a sick-bed, in consequence of his mental and physical powers having been overtaxed in his earnest efforts to hunt down the vile assassin who so cruelly and wantonly murdered a respectable citizen. As the readers of the TIMES have been often told, the detectives, under the superintendence of Capt. KELSO, have never remitted their exertions to discover a clue to the murderer who so cleanly stepped into obscurity a few moments after he had committed the crime that has not yet ceased to agitate the community. In these efforts the detectives have naturally been led away by false lights and rumors, and were compelled to retrace their steps and begin over again. The latest instance of this will-o'-the-wisp chase after the supposed murderer has just occurred, and the Police find themselves in possession of a young man accused of the murder, though they have already arrived at the conclusion that it is a false scent, and a new stumbling block to the truth all are so anxious to discover.

Detective PHILIP FARLEY, of the New-York Police, arrested a young man, on Friday last, along the route of the Schuylkill Canal, on a charge of being the murderer of Mr. NATHAN, or at least an accomplice in the dreadful crime, he having made such statements as gave a coloring to the suspicions entertained against the accused. The detective arrived in this City early yesterday morning, with his prisoner, but had already satisfied himself that no result would be reached in the case, as the man in his custody was evidently an innocent man.

News of the arrest having arrived by telegraph, a reporter of the TIMES visited Police Head-quarters early yesterday forenoon, in order to obtain the details of the arrest for publication, when he, with other representatives of the Press, found great difficulty in obtaining any information from the Police officials. The elaborately-dressed detective who happened to be in the charge of the office suddenly put on his mental armor at the advent of his visitors, and was so persistent in his assertions that he knew nothing of the rumored arrest, or the movements of Officer FARLEY, that the impression was received that he, in reality, knew a great deal, and was acting under instructions to pretend ignorance. As this was so in keeping with the average detective idea, our reporter became convinced that there had been some developments made in the Nathan case, so proceeded to make further investigations. A visit was paid to Inspector DILKS, at his office, in another part of the building, when he, too, proved to be, apparently, almost as ignorant as the detective, though his smile was so full of intelligence that the inference was drawn that he, in reality, knew a great deal more than he would admit. Both the inspector and detective insisted that they knew nothing of FARLEY's movements, nor did they know that he had arrived, though subsequent developments proved exactly the contrary, as at that very moment the alleged murderer was under lock and key on the other side of the corridor.

In this strait our reporter was compelled to intrude upon the privacy of the Police Superintendent, who was at home and quite unwell. With his characteristic candor when no necessity existed for reticience, Mr. JOURDAN frankly informed his visitor that he know very little about the case, except that there seemed to be good ground to go upon when the detective left on Friday night, but he had already received a telegram from the officer that the case had fallen through, and that "he had an elephant on his hands." Orders were afterward issued by the Superintendent that all of the facts should be given in order that the public might not be misled by distorted facts or surmises.

It appears that the prisoner's name is FRANK T. KIPLING, aged twenty-five, and a native of this City. He is a small sized, spare built man, and apparently of an intensely nervous temperament. He was, when visited in his cell, dressed in a tough brown jacket, shirt with collar or neck tie, a gray pair of pantaloons with narrow black stripe, and a black vest and faded coat. His shoes were quite rusty with wear and exposure to the weather, and his beardless features were much tanned by the sun. His eye was clear and bold, and during the conversation he frequently laughed in the most convincing way at the absurdity of his arrest on so serious a charge. FRANK has not been of settled habits for the past two or three years, in consequence of an unfortunate marriage, and though he usually resided with his parents at Roselle, N. J., he frequently vanished away in search of amusement or change of scene. A few weeks ago a canal-boat captain named BENJAMIN HOFFMAN, placed himself in communication with Detective FARLEY, and informed him that a man had appeared along the line of the Schuylkill Canal, a week or two after the Nathan murder, who had acted in a strange and restless manner, and had made statements as led his hearers to believe that he had either been concerned in the murder, or knew something about the assassin. He had taken rooms at the Schuylkill Hotel, at Schuylkill Haven, Penn., and while apparently in possession of considerable money, he failed to account for himself, was unable to sleep in bed, and roused the curiosity of the hotel people by his queer habits and speeches. He was continually talking about the Nathan murder, and from time to time intimated that he knew a great deal more than others. Such was the substance of Hoffman's information, and as it tallied with many similar stories that had exhausted the patience of the detectives, Mr. JOURDAN, the Superintendent, put it down as a hoax, and he now proves to be right in his conjecture. The matter was to be sifted, however, and HOFFMAN was requested to obtain further information. It appeared, however, that other persons beside HOFFMAN had taken an interest in the case, and were busily engaged in working for the reward offered by the Nathan family.

Mr. JOHN KEYTING, the proprietor of the hotel, JOHN B. MARTY, the village constable, and one JIM LEVELLE, a bar-room lounger, who had been crippled while at work on a railroad, all joined in the chase. The object of their suspicion was FRANK KIPLING, who had betrayed an intimate knowledge of the details of the murder of Mr. NATHAN, and, according to their statements, he confessed to them that he not only knew the murderer and the famous "dog," but that he certainly had a few words with the arrest of the committed. KIPLING also said that he was afraid the Police were after him, and "that if a certain person in New-York did not do the handsome thing by him he would so in, and blow on the whole thing." They also alleged that his valise, which had been recently searched, was found to contain some damp and roughly-washed clothing, which had apparently been stained with blood.

KIPLING then entered employment on a canal-boat bound for New-York, and the three volunteer detectives patched up a plan so have him arrested at Brunswick on the way down. MARTY, having previously visited Judge CARDOZA in this City and ascertained that the reward offered would be promptly paid if the information volunteered had any definite result. As soon as Capt. HOFFMAN found he had been overreached by his friends at once telegraphed to Detective FARLEY, who was in ignorance of the proceedings at Hazleton, and the officer started for that City early morning. When he arrived he found that the four men whose names have been given had joined hands and met him without reserve. They persisted in asserting that KIPLING had in so many words admitted his participation in the murder, and that his strange conduct had deepened their conviction that he was, indeed, the man so long and unsuccessfully looked for. So straightforward and complete was the story as presented by these men, that the detective readily decided that he would arrest the suspected man. The party then proceeded by rail as far as Lansdale, Penn., a little hamlet on the line of the canal, in order to intercept the canal barge in which young KIPLING had started for New-York. So little progress had been made by the boat, however, that the detective was compelled to trudge back eight miles on the towpath before he encountered the object of his search, who was quietly driving the mules used to tow the barge.

"Hullo, FRANK," exclaimed the detective, as the latter came up, "don't you know me?"

"No, I don't," replied the driver of the mules, as he was about to pass on with his team.

"Well, I know you," quietly remarked FARLEY, "and I want you to come with me. I'm an officer."

KIPLING surrendered himself with an unmistakable air of astonishment in his face, though he failed to inquire the cause of his sudden arrest. The detective and his companion then escorted their prisoner to Schuylkill Haven, where the rendezvous soon learned that a celebrated New-York murderer had been arrested, and that a large reward had been earned by the fortunate informants. When Mr. FARLEY arrived at the office of the Philadelphia Chief of Police he found that his errand was already known, for a mob of fully 500 excited persons followed him and his prisoner from the depot to the Police office, necessitating the presence of a squad of local Police to keep the people back. The prisoner was then brought on to this City by a late train.

KIPLING learned to Philadelphia for the first time that he was accused of murdering Mr. NATHAN, and though he seemed startled, was evidently amused at his denied the charge. His story and explanation is simply as follows: In consequence of some domestic troubles he became unsettled in life, and left his father's house in Roselle, N. J., on the 15th of August last in order to escape a threatened arrest for abandoning his wife, with whom he had lived unhappily. On arriving at Schuylkill Haven he found the Nathan murder a common topic of conversation, and finding that the people in the hotel knew scarcely anything about the details of the tragedy, he proceeded to give them a narrative, so minute in descriptions and dramatic in form, that he re-enacted the comedy that led to so much trouble for lawyer DUSTPEY, under similar circumstances, a few weeks ago. He emphatically denies having made any confession or partial admission, relative to the knowledge of the murderer, or the manner of the crime, and pronounces all such statements as pure fabrications on the part of those who only seek to obtain the rewards by his arrestee. He remarked that he had told KEYTING and the others that he had been a bar-keeper in a Broadway saloon and knew WARDROOP NAMMERTY for fun; and inquiry at the saloon developed the fact that he had never been so employed. He informed our reporter that he had visited New-York on the 15th of August, and stopped over night at the National Hotel in Cortlandt-street, where he registered himself under his real name. An examination of the hotel books resulted in the discovery that no such person as KIPLING was registered on the day mentioned, or either of the days before and after it, thus showing that he is fond of telling falsehoods, without any apparent object, or end in view. Our reporter also stated that the valise had been found saturated by the rain, in explanation of the suspicious appearance of the contents, and he appears quite hopeful that he will be able to substantiate the truth of all his statements. KIPLING also professes to be able, at the proper time, to prove that he was in New-York on the day and night of the murder, also that he has always borne a good and honest reputation. He is a son of Mr. RICHARD KIPLING, a dealer in precious stones, at No. 14 Maiden-lane, who is in partnership with an elder brother of the prisoner. The family is well known as a very respectable one, and that fact alone is sufficient to convince the accused that it is scarcely possible that he can be in any way connected with so terrible a tragedy, and his manner while conversing is that of a man more inclined to laugh than consider his position in a serious light.

Detective FARLEY found KIPLING in possession of a railroad ticket for New-York, which had been sent him by his parents, and he made a very lame explanation of his motive in choosing the canal route for his return home, merely remarking that he took fancy to go that way, and work his passage. This is, really, the most suspicious circumstance against the man, though the detective attaches very little importance, as he found several letters on the person of his prisoner, written by FRANK's parents, in which they speak of remittances, and urge upon him in the most affectionate way to return home and give up his willful ignorance, which they attribute to the domestic trouble already alluded to. Such are the developments in this singular arrest. The persistency with which Mr. EPTING and Constable MARTY insisted that KIPLING had confessed his guilt is considered remarkable, for their circumstantial statements are in direct issue with that made by the prisoner since his arrest. It is evident that KIPLING is either partially deranged, or has been amusing himself at the expense of these people by his long yarns and singular statements, though it is doubtful whether he went as far as his accusers allege.

An examination into the facts as they appear, or are developed under investigation, will decide very speedily whether the Nathan case has at length reached its end, or not. Under the present aspect of affairs it will appear that the end is as far off as ever.

A Desperate Burglar Arrested—Almost Another Nathan Case.

About 4 o'clock yesterday morning, Mr. FRANCIS WOHLGEMUTH, who was sleeping in the back parlor of his residence, No. 60 Clinton-place, was suddenly awakened by a noise in his apartment, and discovered the presence of an unknown man, who was busily engaged in ransacking the articles in the room. The occupant courageously leaped out of bed and attempted to seize the burglar, who knocked Mr. WOHLGEMUTH down and cut his face, at the same time attempting to escape through the street door. The victim quickly recovered from the assault, and on reaching the door gave an alarm, which was heard by Officer COTTON, of the Fifteenth Precinct, who was near by. As the officer saw a man running away he followed in pursuit, despite the fact that the fugitive deliberately turned round twice and fired two pistol-shots at him, neither taking effect, however. The chase continued for some minutes through University-place to Washington Parade-ground, where Officer COTTON was joined by Patrolman BRADLEY, and they succeeded in securing the fellow after he had taken refuge behind a large tree. When searched the prisoner was found in possession of a revolver of the brass-knuckle pattern. He was in his stocking feet. No stolen property was found on his person, nor had there been anything stolen, so far as is known at present. His shoes were subsequently discovered in the hallway of Mr. WOHLGEMUTH's residence. When the prisoner was arraigned before Justice SHANDLEY, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, he gave his name as WILLIAM MILLER, and denied all knowledge of either the complainant or the burglary. The evidence, however, was conclusive, as the complainant positively identified him as his assailant, while the fact of his being without shoes and having fired a pistol at the policeman, made out a complete case against him. MILLER is a good looking man, aged twenty-five, a native of the United States, and has dark side whiskers, being neatly and rather fashionably dressed. The supposition is that he gained access to the premises through the street-door, which he opened by turning the key with a pair of slippers he stole as Mr. WOHLGEMUTH had made the necessary affidavit, supplemented by those of the officers making the arrest, the Magistrate remanded the prisoner for trial at the General Sessions, and refused bail for him.

NEWS FROM WITHIN PARIS.

A Demand for Peace—Jules Favre Preparing a Report of His Mission—A Decree Substituting a Provisional Commission for the Council of State—Algeria.

TOURS, Sept. 26.—A ministerial note in the Moniteur confirms yesterday's proclamation of the Government at Tours, and making Europe the judge, says: "We wanted to stop this barbarous conflict, which decimates the people for the benefit of a few ambitious men. We would accept equitable conditions, but will yield neither an inch of territory nor a stone of our fortresses."

M. JULES FAVRE is engaged in drawing up a report in detail of his mission to the Prussian head-quarters.

Copies of the Journal Officiel of the 20th, 21st and 22d have just reached Tours from St. Evreux, where they arrived by balloon. From them the following items are gathered:

A decree appoints the members of the Provisional Commission which replaces the Council of State.

The state of siege has been raised in Algeria.

A fire commenced in Fort Vincennes, but it was almost immediately extinguished.

The bridge of Billancourt was blown up on the 20th.

It was rumored that the Prussian Dragoons occupied the Château Meudon.

Gen. TROCHU, on the 21st, made a reconnoissance of the defenses of Fort St. Denis, which he found in a remarkably strong condition.

The besiegers occupied Bougiva, Ruel and Nanterre on the morning of the 21st, but they have not yet appeared at Courbevoie, Suresne or St. Cloud. On the north and east the enemy does not keep at a distance. His vandettes show themselves on the road from Chattelon to Chevreuse, and are sometimes shelled.

In front of Fort Vauves there had been a light engagement with the enemy's tirailleurs.

The commanders of Forts of Bicêtre and Ivry signalled that the enemy had appeared again at Villejuif, L'Hay, and Echevilly, seeming to direct their forces toward the road of Sceaux.

At Fort Nogent the hostile forces have been signalled at the Pont de Boie, across the Marne. At Fort Roumainville the enemy is seen within 6,000 metres of the works, and they have thrown up earthworks near Lacourneuve. None of the enemies scouts have appeared at St. Cloud.

ROME AND THE ITALIANS.

France Officially Abandons the September Convention—The Plebiscitum to be Taken on the 2d of October—Rome Ruled by a Local Junta—Congratulations from American Italians.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The Pope has been officially notified that France abandons the September Convention. Gen. LA MARMORA has taken the chief command of the Italian Army at Rome. There is no doubt that the Plebiscitum will be taken on the 2d of October. Until then it is settled that a local Junta shall rule at Rome.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 25.—The Italians residing in this city last night held a mass-meeting in favor of the unity of Italy. J. A. SEGREDO presided. The following dispatch was sent to King VICTOR EMMANUEL: "The Italians of Memphis, in mass-meeting, congratulate your Majesty on liberating Rome and Italian unity, amid cheers for the King, Italy and the Eternal City."

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

The Vomito in Spain on the Increase—The Antwerp and New-York Line of Steamers.

MADRID, Sept. 25.—The ravages of the vomito at Barcelona are increasing, and the panic among the inhabitants is frightful. Yesterday, out of thirty-five cases there were twenty-four deaths. All the Government offices have been removed from the place.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 25.—Bids for Antwerp and New-York line of steamers will be received until Oct. 15.

The father-in-law of Dr. LIVINGSTONE, the African explorer, told an audience at Manchester that he felt sure that his son was safe.

The Cincinnati Industrial Exhibition—A Brilliant Annual Display—The Newport and Cincinnati Bridge Controversy.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 25.—Preparations at the Industrial Exhibition still continue, and though the place has been open to visitors during the past three days, there have been more preparation days than days of exhibition. The work in the power hall has been very heavy and the process necessarily slow. The machinery will probably be running by Wednesday. Preparations for the reception of the Southern merchants, next Thursday, will be of an extensive character. There will be forty from Atlanta alone. The President of the Chamber of Commerce will deliver the reception address....There was a very brilliant display of the aurora borealis here last evening. At 10 o'clock broad bands of red light streamed up from the north and west like the light from a distant fire, and many persons at first thought it came from burning buildings. Soon tongues of white light shot up from points more to the northward, reaching to the south, and finally spreading into broad sheets that lit up the whole northern heavens.....The Committee appointed recently to investigate the Newport and Cincinnati bridge matter met yesterday. MILNOR ROBERTS, the engineer of the bridge, was present, and a number of prominent steam-boat men, besides the attorneys for the Bridge Company. It is claimed by persons in the river interest that the bridge at high water renders navigation through the draw at night dangerous, while at low water it is obstructed altogether. The representat

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE STORY OF A WORKING MAN'S LIFE. By FRANCIS MASON, D. D. New-York: OAKLEY, MASON & Co.

This book, prefaced with an introduction by Dr. W. R. WILLIAMS, is the extremely interesting autobiography of one of the most distinguished of our modern missionaries. The story of his active and laborious life is told in a very simple and attractive manner; and it does not want for variety, since it carries the reader from old York, in England, to all the chief quarters of the globe.

FRANCIS MASON, born in 1799, was, and is the son of a respectable town-missionary, who very well sustained the proverbial character of "the gentle craft"—that of St. Crispin—and the young man was at first of the same trade himself, and of an aspiring disposition which led him to disrespect the ultra crepidam aphorism which the ancient Romans were so fond of. He came to America in his nineteenth year, eager to see, to work and to learn; traveled through our chief cities and towns, North-west and South, taking the shrewdest notice everywhere, and finally made his home at Canton, in Massachusetts, where he married, and educated himself for the ministry; and thence he proceeded, in 1830, with his wife, to the Burmese ground of Tenasserim, on the eastern coast of the Bay of Bengal—a region under English Government. That part of the life-history which takes us to the missionary station, or stations, of the Karen country, as it is called, is a very interesting one to all ethnologists and philological inquirers. The doctor finds the Burmese a people very distinct from the Hindoos, and very much resembling the Red men of North America. On this subject he says:

"On landing in Burmah, we found ourselves in the midst of an entirely new family. The black men and the white man had been left behind, and we were among red men passing into yellow, bearing a very considerable resemblance, particularly in color, to the American Indians. There were several different nations, but all with a family resemblance, like the different tribes of the American aborigines. Not only was the color different from the nations we had left, but the features and the form of the head were also changed. The face, instead of being oval, was shaped like the pagodas they worshiped, to a pyramidal form. It was wide across the mouth, narrow at the chin, with the cheek bones high, the bridge of the nose low, and the mouth large. All were remarkable for having very little beard, which is characteristic of the Northern Asiatic nations, and also of the American Indians."

Dr. MASON'S labors tended to benefit, not only the Karens, Talaings and Selungs of Tenasserim, but the scholars and thinkers of the world elsewhere. Having a large love of language, he studied and compared all the dialects and jargon that met his ears, and his observations are always shrewd and valuable. Speaking of the intelligent progress of the Burmese, he says:

"The Burmans have the regular drama and the game of chess, which alone lift them above uncivilized tribes. The chess differs slightly from the European game, but only where the Europeans have altered it from the East, for it was brought into Western Europe by the Crusaders, who appear to have altered the Burmese 'horses' to 'knights,' and 'chariots' to 'castles,' as now found in the European game. The Burmese name checkers has been adopted, 'the relief or rest of an army,' which is not quite correct. The name is derived from the Pali, or Sanskrit, chata, 'four,' and anga, 'a member,' i. e., 'the four members,' (of an army,) elephants, chariots, cavalry and infantry; and is the same name dragged through Persian and Arabic which appears in the English Bowyer, which, with its name, refers to the French. The 'rook' of the English game is the same word as the rukh of the Burmese, being the Pali or Sanskrit name for chariot."

The language of the Talaings occupied a good deal of Dr. MASON'S attention: he says it stands isolated among all the dialects east of the Ganges, and thinks it related in some way to that of the Koles, a mountain people of Hindostan, especially noticed by the German missionaries; while both belong to the aboriginal speech of the peninsula displaced by that of the Hindoos. His attention was mainly addressed to the Karens, a "mountain" people, whose name seems to have that signification—though the doctor does not suggest it—and he translated the Gospel of St. Matthew into Karen, in 1837; all the New Testament in 1843; and in 1853 the whole Bible—known and highly appreciated among missionaries and scholars as the "Sgau Karen Bible." In 1841 he started a Karen periodical—still extant in Tavoy—giving an example followed in Moulmain, Assam and elsewhere. His Karen converts were great helps in his linguistical researches. In 1852 he published at Calcutta a work called Tenasserim, or Notes on the Fauna, Flora, Minerals and Races of Burmah and Pegu—one of the most instructive books of the kind ever published in the East. In 1853, Dr. MASON, being then stationed at Toungoo, imported a press from Boston, in order to teach the Karens how to work it, and he himself learned the printers' art at the case, the better to carry out his purposes. That Karen press has done a great amount of good, in publishing a number of useful little treatises; but its great triumph was the Pali Grammar, from the pen of our "indefatigable philologist, scholar and missionary," and based on the old work of KACHCHAYANO, called the Aristotle of the Buddhists." Pali is the language of the Buddhist Scriptures, and it is spoken by three hundred millions of Orientals. Another of the doctor's greater works—this being brought out by the press at Rangoon—is entitled Burmah: its People and Natural Productions; a book full of the most valuable information for all ethnologists and lovers of the languages, discussing as it does the character of the Burmese tribes and their various dialects.

The Autobiography touches on a great variety of themes, treated in an independent style and with the authority of age and experience. The opinion on "strikes," coming from a sometime artisan, is calculated to impress all men of that class. The doctor is against them, and thinks arbitration and other quieter means of redress preferable. This excellent book concludes in a characteristic manner, with a retrospect and a résumé of the world's progress for the last seventy years; and it leaves the venerable writer in his old place of Toungoo, still capable of working for the missionary cause, and offering a title of the sale profits of the work to support a Karen preacher at that place. The volume is brought out in handsome type, and ornamented with several very good illustrations of Oriental scenery. One more illustration is greatly wanted, however. It is the portrait of the author himself.

TREATISE ON SOLUBLE OR WATER GLASS. By Dr. LEWIS FEUCHTWANGER. New-York: No. 56 Cedar-street.

Dr. FEUCHTWANGER presents himself as one of the "conquerors of necessity," praised by Lord VERULAM, and offers a comparatively new invention to the industrial workers of this country—the soluble glass—which he was the first to introduce here, as Prof. FUCHS was the first to use it practically in Germany, nearly fifty years ago. He has already created a demand for it for a variety of every-day purposes, such as making soap, washing clothes, the ornamental painting of houses; and mixed with paper pulp or cheap vegetable fibre, it would serve for the manufacture of a variety of useful articles, such as stair-cases, boxes, trunks, soles for boots and shoes, photographic instruments, piano keys, &c. But the chief merit of the invention would seem to be the preservation of stone monuments from the action of damp and time, and the formation of a cement which would be a valuable addition to the materials of our architects, and tend to make their work much more beautiful as well as more durable. The doctor says:

"The first idea that suggests itself of the use of such a liquid is the preparation of artificial stones for ornamental and building purposes. Should it be possible to produce this petrifying liquid cheap enough, building-stones in all their variety could be made and cemented together with the same petrifying solution. The cost of cast flint-marble statuary, tomb-stones, baths, mantel-pieces, and ornaments of all kinds, would be, of course, much less than if laboriously cut from the stone, and they come quickly into universal use. In a similar way, as photography now diffuses the masterpieces of the art of painting among all classes of society, and castings (their cheap substitutes) extend marble-works, would multiply and diffuse the master-pieces of sculpture, and adorn our public buildings, gardens and parks. Bas-reliefs, cameos, cornices, columns, pillars, &c., might be produced at comparatively cheap prices. Should the liquid be of a kind to permit its application to outside or inside walls, like plaster, we could cover our brick and stone-work with white or colored fine-marble fronts, and our churches, halls, theatres, parlors, and rooms with alone-like walls and ceilings, colored and frescoed with elegant frescoes as durable as the still fresh paintings at Herculaneum and Pompeii; while the floors could be inlaid with fully-colored stones in mosaic style."

All this is full of suggestion and will attract the attention of all artisans working in the numerous branches of industry. A monopoly of the soluble glass has been applied to the defective masonry of the English Houses of Parliament, the Louvre, the Church of Notre Dame, and other public buildings, and there is every reason to think that it is answering its purpose effectually. The doctor's book not alone suggests results of such a desirable nature, but takes the reader into the chemistry of them and shows the actual and practicable way of producing them; and it must for this reason be considered one of the most noteworthy chemical books of the day. We were about to speak of it as especially a book for architects; but it has a value for manufacturers and chemical students as well, and it contains some essays on carbonic acid, and limestone and silica which will be found very instructive by the general reader. Altogether, Dr. FEUCHTWANGER'S book is a valuable contribution to the great work of industrial progress in this country. If the style of his book leads any one to remember that he writes in a foreign language, it will also convey the idea of one more great difficulty very handsomely overcome.

THE FEMININE SOUL. By ELIZABETH STUART. Boston: HENRY H. & T. W. CARTER.

One more of those touching and unidentifiable pleadings of the sex against overbearing "man," whose conduct, even in these days of progress and enlightenment, seems to make necessary such appeals to what is left of human justice in the world. It is a large and very interesting argument, and it can only end in one way—which is, the old way. Women will yet have the liberty, as the helpmates of man, to do what they may see fit in that capacity, according to the ancient rule of the race. People are fond of saying that the old times of barbarism, or semi-barbarism, were those in which women were kept down and out of sight, and used merely as toys or drudges; but the truth was the other way. In the early ages they were expected to bear a hand in whatever was going. MUSGRAVE says it is the man "qui fait tout et qui accomplit," but at first the women used to speak their minds as freely in council and as freely show their hands in battle as their husbands and brothers. HIPPOCRIS and SEMIRAMIS did men's work and kept men in order, even in the East; and there is no need to speak of the Miriams, Judiths and Cleopatras. Coming nearer home, we find the women holding their places among the men of the Celtic tribes, and a British warrior Queen driving her car against the Roman cohorts, her troops not being at all ashamed to fight under the "homophorion." In Germany, the women—and even the old women—were treated with a respect they scarcely find in our own days; and the grandmothers had far more influence among the tribes than the grandfathers. The Norse Velleda—or Lady, as we may pronounce it, though the critic of the current number of the Edinburgh Review rather rashly scoffed at such a conclusion—that Norse Velleda, as well as the Weird Sisters and the Sibyls, Pagan and Christian, show the respect in which women were held in the ruder ages of the world by the men, who never thought they were making any refined or praiseworthy concessions.

Nature, in fact, only reclaims her old order when women are allowed to use their brains and their fingers as freely as the men; and we have an idea the social tendencies will bring us back to this in the end, since the progress of man's minds tends to enlarge the freedom of human action in everything, while it also tends to regulate the judgment. Mrs. STUART'S little book is in the good old-fashioned style of womanly didactics, a graceful plea setting forth all that is best and most valuable in the character of the sex, and at the same time showing that the truest instincts of women will always influence them in the direction of domestic life. She writes mainly for the middle classes of English society, and has none of the agonistic or antagonistic sentiment which animates women of stronger and more revolutionary ideas whose minds are exasperated by the condition of women struggling in crowded cities with all the evils of hard work, sickness and poverty. Women of easy lives will be sure to like Mrs. STUART'S well-written essay; but there is a large section of the sex who would think it too rose-colored for the present needs and aspects of society.

CAMORA. From the French of OCTAVE FEUILLET. Philadelphia: PETERSON & BROTHERS.

The translator of this "love story" protests there is an unjust prejudice against French novels, on account of their indelicacy and immorality, and says that a better growth has come with the Empire, and that a great many worse improprieties may be found in English and "Broadway" publications. We feel reassured by this, and are prepared to do justice to the work before us, the moral of which appears to have been a good deal praised by the French critics.

The story opens at once with the suicide of the elder Camora. He comes home in the evening, regards the familiar objects of his apartment with emotion, sits down and writes to his son a long farewell of several pages, in a great measure didactic, and winding up with this paragraph: "Chance somewhat your style of fencing, as it is altogether too open, my son. Do not get angry. Rarely laugh, and never weep. Adieu." Then he blows his brains out. Now comes the youthful Camora. He has a dear old college friend, Lescande, who has saved up enough to marry the pretty Juliette and have a little ménage, and invites Raoul to go to see them. He goes—Camora goes; and the quick seduction of poor Juliette follows. She dies in the second chapter. Then we have Charlotte de Lac d'Estrelles, "tall and blonde, with deep-set eyes, under the shadow of sweeping black lashes." A majestic maid. She comes to Camora and offers to marry him—"her large eyes full of fire." He refuses. She then marries Gen. Campvallon, a good old fellow, who gives Camora a little estate; and as Camora treats the General's wife as he formerly treated Mme. Lescande. When Campvallon finds them out, he throws up his hands, gets a fit and dies. After this, Camora marries a very young girl, who also makes discoveries, goes off and leaves him. He becomes unhappy in consequence, and goes to live with the widow Campvallon; after which the grief increases. He does not recover, but expires in spasms. "Thus died Camora, who was a great sinner, but was nevertheless, a man"—this last sentence being M. FEUILLET'S moral for the reader.

The novel is a very French one altogether, and will, no doubt, be welcome to those who love "Paul de Kock" and "Eugene Sue."

HISTORY OF ENGLAND FROM THE FALL OF WOLSEY TO THE DEFEAT OF THE SPANISH ARMADA. By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, M. A. Vols. XI. and XII. New-York: CHARLES SCRIBNER & Co., 1870.

Mr. FROUDE, more fortunate than either MACAULAY or BUCKLE, has finished the work which he proposed to himself at its outset, viz.: "To describe the transition from the Catholic England, with which the century opened, the England of a dominant Church, and monasteries and pilgrimages, into the England of progressive intelligence." We may regret that the work, already so well executed, was not carried further; we must rejoice that so far as it goes it is complete. It would seem that the great histories of England are destined to be only magnificent fragments. To the student of British annals from ALFRED to VICTORIA, hiatus after hiatus occurs which he finds occupied by no better productions than those of the dry annalist or of the perfunctory summary writer. Life is too short to permit of even the student exhuming the materials of history from the "original sources" of a score of Dryasdusts for every separate epoch. Writers like MOTLEY, MACAULAY and FROUDE are, therefore, in addition to their character of great authors, real benefactors to the species, inasmuch as they help us to fill in the needful continuity of the development of our race, without the necessity of spending much valuable time in grubbing among the refuse of departed ages. Mr. FROUDE'S manner of presenting the features of the most momentous time of which he treats, has been closely and severely criticised. The Spanish authorities [illegible] these later volumes formed the subject of a [illegible] newspaper controversy [illegible] time ago. [illegible] of the author [illegible] opinion expressed [illegible] of his style, [illegible] grouping at once skillful and accurate of his embarrassing wealth of materials.

THE LIFE OF ARTHUR TAPPAN. New-York: HURD & HOUGHTON.

This life of a distinguished merchant prince of New-York and a philanthropist, whose biography may be fitly headed with the

"Justitiæ tantæ propositi rerum,
Non civium ardor prava jubentium," of the poet HORACE, will be read with interest by a great many who can remember his good qualities, and admire the social principles on which he acted so decidedly during his life. The book contains, also, a good deal to interest the general reader in its reminiscences of old times and old actors in society. Mr. TAPPAN'S (eldest daughter) in writing down some recollections of her father, gives some interesting paragraphs, such as the following:

"About the year 1818 my parents moved from Gold-street to Whitehall-street, near the Battery. This was a delightful home. Every day when the weather permitted, we spent hours in that then, pleasant park, under the old trees, or picking up shells and seaweed on the beach at low tide. Father sometimes hired a boat and men to row it, and took us all to Staten Island, or to Hoboken, where we wandered in the wild path by the river or rested under the trees on the lawn in front of the old inn, the only house I remember there.

"Whitehall and State streets, and the Battery, were very different from what they now are of the present time. The Battery was kept in nice order, and was a place of daily resort for the families in the neighborhood, both parents, children and nurses. State-street, especially, was full of elegant houses overlooking the Battery and Harbor, and a peculiar class. There was much social and friendly visiting between the neighbors. When we were old enough to go to school, we sat up evenings with father and mother, listened to his reading aloud, usually some history, or he would hear us recite our lessons for next day at school. During their whole married life our parents were accustomed to play a game of chess every evening. They did so but a year before mother died, with as much interest as of old. We played dominoes, the only game besides chess, we were allowed, and father taught us both games."

Mr. TAPPAN had the munificent ideas of a Prince, and this fine trait will always keep his character in honorable remembrance.

THE NORMAL GRAMMAR, ANALYTIC AND SYNTHETIC. By SYLVESTER W. CLARK, A. M. New-York: A. S. BARNES & CO. 1870.

Mr. CLARK has added to the list of his existing elementary works on English Grammar, the somewhat more elaborate manual before us. The author continues to have undiminished faith in the efficacy of diagrams to illustrate the analysis and construction of sentences. In the hands of a teacher who has a certain amount of enthusiasm in his subject, we have no doubt this system of bracketing words according to their relative importance, may excite fresh interest in a study in which the juvenile mind does not readily take much interest. On the other hand, it treated in the dry, mechanical way, which is the rule rather than the exception, with the instruction of youth, these groups of verbal cells will only add fresh horrors and perplexities to the "science of the English language and the art of using it." As the book is intended for advanced classes, some little care was to be looked for in the more erudite sections, such as that on Prosody. As an introduction to a critical appreciation of poetical literature, this portion of the work is manifestly imperfect. Not to speak of minor faults, such as the spelling of MILTON'S great elegiac poem thus: "Lyndas," the author as at issue with all critics worthy of the name, in calling SCOTT'S Lady of the Lake an epic poem, and in admitting into his classification of kinds of poetry, a division known as the "Charade." Apart from such minor short-comings, the treatise is admirably arranged, and very clearly explained, and will doubtless take as high a place as the previous educational works by the same author.

THE LITTLE MAID OF OXBOW. By MAY MANTON. THE PINES AND ELSEWHERE. By ROSA ABBOTT. CHARLEY AND EVA. ROBERTS' HOME IN THE WEST. By the author of "How Charley Roberts Became a Man." 4s. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD.

We group this trind of volumes together, not because of any connection there exists between them, except the common one of forming an early installment of New-Year's gift-books adapted for the reading of the youth of both sexes. This feature they have in common with the "Proverb Stories," just issued by the same publishers, and they are further distinguished by the same healthy tone, vigorous style, and natural and graphic narrative. There are not a few adults who, furtively, take refuge from the forced and sensational plots of modern novels in the simple and spontaneous freshness of stories like those before us. The number is very likely to increase, so long as the degree of excellence notably possessed by the juvenile books published by LEE & SHEPARD is maintained at its present standard. One feature which these tales possess in common, deserves to be noted, and it is this, that their favorite characters exhibit no trace of the unhealthy precocity so prevalent among both young and grown-up children in our modern society. We have here, under different forms, consistent types of genuine boys and girls, who have no premature aspirations to be considered gentlemen and ladies, and yet whose sayings and doings become, on that account, only doubly interesting and instructive. The volumes are handsomely set up, and suitably illustrated.

THE PROVERB STORIES. Second Series. Three vols. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD. 1871.

In default of any very distinctive type of native fiction for adults, we are developing, with not a little success, a very excellent school of story-writing for boys and girls. To those who are old enough to remember the "Goody Goody" tales which were furnished to the youth of a past generation, a glance through such narratives as The Story of a Bad Boy, The Old-Fashioned Girl, or the series of which the volumes before us form a continuation, will convince them that our contemporary youth have fallen upon better and brighter times. One Good Turn Deserves Another, Actions Speak Louder than Words, and A Wrong Confessed is Half Redressed, are the volumes comprising the second series of the "Proverb Stories." The two first bear the name of KATE J. NEELY; the last is from the pen of Mrs. BRADLEY. The distinctive and characteristic excellences of these two writers reappear in these latest works with undiminished freshness. The moral tone and purpose is excellent, without ever degenerating into any approach to sermonizing. The narrative is vigorous, lifelike and well sustained, and the dialogue idiomatic enough to please the greatest stickler after realism. Altogether the volumes present a valuable addition to our increasing store of healthy juvenile literature.

LITTLE THREADS OR TANGLED THREADS. SILVER THREAD AND GOLDEN THREAD. By the author of "Sugar Six Birthdays," &c. New-York: ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & CO. 1870.

This is a story, or rather group of stories, in which there is much unaffected pathos and truthful delineation of child life. It is, however, rather a story for mothers than for children. The author describes the hopes, and fears, and longings of the little folks too much from the maternal point of view to engage the undivided interest of the children themselves. As a story to be reproduced with parental comment to a circle of youngsters it is, however, unexceptionable.

THE BOYS OF GRAND PRE SCHOOL. By the author of "The B. o. W. O." &c. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD. 1871.

It used to be made an objection to DICKENS'S novels that one never knew when they were to end, since the author's fondness for writing sequel after sequel made it a somewhat formidable business to get fairly through with a given line of narrative. The present volume is chargeable, to some extent, with the same imperfection. It forms a continuation of the history of the juvenile fraternity known as the "B. O. W. C.," and bearing the announcement of "others in preparation" in mind, the reader sees a vista of a possible series of six volumes ere he has finished with these heroes of Grand Pre School. There is this redeeming feature about the book, however—it can afford to stand solely on own its merits. There is enough of genuine humor and downright fun in it from first to last, as well as in its predecessor, to make it a favorite with all its readers.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As an approach to [illegible] just tribute which is due to the German soldier, I heartily welcome your editorial remarks in the TIMES of today, dwelling upon the comparative merits of the [illegible] and the English rifle. You rightly say:

"As the needle-gun only becomes effective at a distance of six hundred yards, the Prussians have to traverse 1,600 yards without being able to return the enemy's fire. These tactics contrast with the new tactics followed by the French in the present war of swelling instead of advancing to attack, and they render still more conspicuous the almost uninterrupted course of German successes."

This last sentence displies the most admission that the German successes were not solely due to superior numbers, to better generalship and to a more perfect commissariat, for how could these factors, taken by one inch the distance of three yards, so immense and so fatally under a rain of bullets, that the French arms carry further.

Nothing is apt to demoralize an army, it is the consequence of its being dominated without being able to strike a blow in return. The inflect course alone can withstand such a fearful trial, and I am happy to see that the realization of the truest and foremost cause of the uninterrupted course of German victories begins to dawn upon the New-York Press, as it has dawned long ago upon the French themselves—the admirable, irresistible zeal, courage and bravery of the Prussians, Bavarians, Saxons; the unparalleled, undaunted, death-contemning valor and heroism of all German soldiers alike.

France looks upon them with dread, Germany with pride, Europe with wonder; America might at least do justice to them, for never has the world beheld a braver and a nobler army, one more modest and more intelligent, one more moderate in victory and more generous to the vanquished. Have the fields of Saarbrücken, Forbach and Mars-la-Tour not proved of what stuff these German soldiers are made when they were battling against overwhelming numbers, and wrested a victory where defeat seemed almost sure? Is there a more brilliant achievement recorded anywhere than the one performed by the single Prussian division on the bloody field of Mars-la-Tour, when for six long hours it engaged and detained the entire French Army under BAZAINE, in order to give Prince FREDERICK CHARLES time to bring up his corps? This heroic division, every man of which was sure to meet a certain death, immolated itself upon the altar of its country: these soldiers fought and died as only the bravest, the most intelligent and patriotic can fight and die.

It is not ancient history alone that has its Thermopylæ. The last impartial observer of the war is forced to acknowledge that the uninterrupted, overwhelming successes of Germany would have been impossible in spite of her numerical superiority and her abler generalship, had not her sons displayed an almost superhuman bravery and endurance. They fought on foreign and hostile soil, after long and exhausting marches, while the French were fighting in their own country, under the walls of their fortresses, under the protection of their fortifications, from behind rampart breastworks, and from chosen positions. The Germans were always the attacking party, as this mode of warfare alone promised victory and success against the deadly, far-carrying Chassepot, the merciless Mitrailleuse, and the secure, defensive position of the French. They overwhelmed them and bloody triumphs by scaling heights, fording streams, storming fortifications and making irresistible bayonet charges. All this while under a hail-storm of shot and shell that rained down upon them from impregnable works and an unseen foe, and decimated their off-broken but never wavering ranks.

The French soldier is, as all the world knows, brave to a fault, and a foe worthy of the German; but as so much has been said of the bravery and heroism of the one, and so little of the other, and as all the grand achievements of the German armies have failed to give to the individuals composing them, at least in the Press on this side the Atlantic—that credit for personal valor and courage to which they are justly entitled, I hail with pleasure the opportunity of doing an act of justice, and of gratifying a patriotic pride.

England's Non-Intervention Policy.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I think that attentive readers of some of your leading articles, and of the editorials of many other of our most influential journals, would infer that merely local position, and not the genius of our Government, makes us to differ in foreign policy from the military nations of Europe; that if England and the United States were geographically transposed, we should not only sustain an army and navy as large and expensive as here, but we should be as ready to fight for the prestige of a first-rate military Power as any of the great nations of Europe. In a word, that the great distinction of which we have boasted from the beginning is a mere geographical virtue; that if we had such neighbors as England, France and Prussia abutting upon us on every side, we should keep up as large standing armies as they, and for the same objects. Indeed, the American Press seems to denounce England as groveling, mean and cowardly because she is practically adopting our foreign policy, and extricating herself from "entangling alliances" with foreign States, involving armed intervention in their quarrels. She is taunted with the baseness and shame of rendering her stature and estimation to the level of a second-rate or even a third-rate Power, by following the policy which we have adopted as one of our most glorious distinctions over the nations of the Old World.

Now there are a few facts and reasons which I think the American mind ought to appreciate, as justifying England in adopting our own non-intervention policy. In the first place, she has learned by the bitter experience of two hundred years, the cost, folly, and utter uselessness of spending her blood and treasure in Continental wars. Full nineteen-twentieths of her vast national debt are the legacy of taxation imposed by those wars upon every man, woman and child in the United Kingdom. But this is not the worst. The principle on which she rushed into armed intervention on the Continent is now utterly abominated by the masses of the English people, and it has been denounced in Parliament as wrong and indepensible by the leaders of both political parties. In fact, there is no war that England ever waged on the Continent which, as a nation, she has not learned to regard and regret as a mistake. Both the Government as well as the people are beginning to believe that the last was the greatest mistake of all. Before the ram and dews of ten Summers had greened the populous graves at the Crimea, they seemed to send back to the country that filled them with her sons, railing voices against its old habit and policy of armed intervention.

Then there is another palpable circumstance to be taken into account in explaining this non-intervention policy, which many Americans seem to think so honorable to us and so dishonorable to England. The masses of common working-men in England, the class which in all countries supplies the rank and file of armies, begin to feel a new value in themselves and in their possibilities of comfort and happiness. They begin to feel that they are worth more to themselves and to mankind as industrious artisans than as "food for gunpowder," in armed interventions, or wars in foreign countries for a balance of power, or for any of the old issues of the past. Now, this sentiment, pervading the great masses of the English people, may seem inherent and "grovelling" to the remnants of military glory, to the classic professors of martial chivalry and history, who think nothing so glorious as the "big-planed wars;" but it is a sentiment that is beginning to permeate and animate the working masses of Europe, and to take an utterance that the strongest Governments will soon be compelled to hear and heed. That sentiment will create a solidarity which will overthrow the preposterous armed-peace system which bleeds Christendom at every vein, and produces all the bloody wars, like the present, for balance of power or military prestige.

In the way of moral intervention, what Bible old more to avert this fearful and bloody struggle than England? If we strike the balance of honest, hearty effort to this end, can we say our exertions exceeded hers to prevent the catastrophe? From the declaration of the war to the overthrow of NAPOLEON, was she more Prussian in her sympathy and language than we? In striking at the Emperor, did her journals and public speakers hit more Frenchmen, of the rank and file of the nation, than ours did? Since the fall of the Imperial throne, France has sunk from subjugation to dismemberment; than she has done she has done more to the end [illegible] (30 [illegible] that this [illegible] more ready than she [illegible] to rush into [illegible] Thou come, [illegible] to do it with the threatening emphasis of a [illegible] military lover? Look at the [illegible] in Washington more in earnest and endeavor to save Paris than is London? If England hesitates to recognize the French Republic, as the express will and work of the French people, is she less disposed than we to recognize the Provisional Government in Paris as the only ruling power in France? Does she not recognize in JULES FAVRE and THIERS all the prerogatives of authority which they claim and we admit? Let us commend these considerations and questions to those who justify and glorify our policy, and denounce England in this great matter.

WELTBURGER.

The Bail of the Agent of the Associated Press Applied to Boston Newspapers—Cleared from Mr. Simmons.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

An extended journalistic experience has taught me that libel suits against newspapers, as a rule, are unnecessary. Generally the cause of action is some accidental error, which any respectable editor would promptly correct on proper representations. But there are exceptions, wherein libelous publications are clearly the manifestations of malice, and can only be properly met by calling their utterers into Court.

I have instituted proceedings against a Boston evening newspaper on account of a series of such malicious libels, in which the attempt was repeatedly made to impair public confidence in both my professional ability and personal integrity. The defendants repeat their offence by publicly announcing their readiness to justify the charges complained of. Monthsthence plenty before we can get a hearing. Meantime, constantly reiterated slanders, however baseless, are apt to make some impression on the public mind unless promptly met. Will you allow me, therefore, to amply say through your columns that I defy the production in Court of any evidence invalidating my title to respect of honorable men. Let me assure my assailants that I shall avail of no technicalities, but will open the door for a full investigation of my conduct, and decline no investigation upon which they rely to prove that I have ever attempted to use my position for purposes of speculation, either properly or improperly.

This challenge is presented in no boastful spirit; for if I claim personal integrity, it is no more than every man is bound to possess. But it is a duty owed to the community at large, no less than to my family and friends, that I should thus emphatically stamp the falsehood of those who, without provocation, have sought to subject me to base suspicion.

Refunding Insurance Premiums.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I notice in your issue of yesterday, an article on life insurance, signed EDWARD L. COLLINS, in which the writer complains that, on discontinuing his payments after three years, the Company refused to refund him any portion of the premium. I would like enough of your valuable space to ask Mr. COLLINS one question. Suppose I were to take a lease of his house for a term of years, and after paying rent as agreed for three years, should be unable to do so thereafter, would Mr. COLLINS eject me at once, or would he be not more the gainer, and return me a portion of the rent already paid?

I do not presume to be any better posted on life insurance than other people, but think that, as I would have received the value of my money by occupying his house, so Mr. COLLINS received the value of his by having that several years the contingent company liable at any time to pay $20,000 in case of death. By giving this a place in your columns you will not only present both sides of the question, but also do them JUSTICE.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Sept. 24, 1870.

School Accommodations in this City.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of this morning you remark: "But if Brooklyn falls short in accommodations, New-York must fall seriously short in attendance, since, with double the population, we show more than 3,000 less children on the rolls than the sister city." This is a very serious error. It is true that in my report of the 21st inst. to the Board of Education, it was stated that at least 82,325 pupils were in attendance in the Grammar and Primary Schools of the City during the week succeeding the Summer vacation; but the average attendance of pupils for the year ending Dec. 31, 1869, was, according to the last report of education, 103,892, while the whole number of pupils taught during the year was 225,622. By the last report of the State Superintendent it will be seen that the average attendance of pupils in the public schools of Brooklyn for the year ending Sept. 30, 1869, was 32,941, while during the same year in New-York it is stated in the same report as 34,456, or nearly three times as great. By the same report it appears that during the year ending Sept. 30, 1869, the whole number of pupils attending the Brooklyn public schools was 68,561, while in the New-York public schools it was 217,978, or about three and one-half times as great.

Very respectfully, yours,
HENRY KIDDLE,
City Superintendent.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, Superintendent's Office, New-York, Sept. 22, 1870.

Settling Everybody's Affairs.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

If the great peoples of Europe ever expect to be able to unshackle themselves from the tyranny of monarchical Governments; from the cruel and crushing cost of vast standing armies; from the bloody burden of having to fight and slay each other as a means of adjusting the unnecessary differences between bloated despots, and from those absolutely base and barbarous sentiments of the rulers of realms that render peace precarious and war certain, let them, at once and forever, overthrow all their pampered and puffed-up dynasties, all their power-proud kings and potentates, and establish in their stead republican forms and institutions of government, similar to those of our own great and glorious American Republic. For success in a grand republican movement of this kind the present is the most opportune moment that has ever occurred; and it may well be feared that so favorable a moment may not occur again for the next hundred years. With your permission, I will suggest to our republican friends in the Old World the following candidates for the Presidential Ministry of the seven most important nationalities:

FOR PRESIDENT OF Prussia—KARL BISMARCK.
France—ADOLPHE THIERS.
Austria—FREDERICK BRUST.
Russia—ALEXANDER GORTSCHAKOFF.
Great Britain—JOHN BRIGHT.
Spain—EMILIO CASTELAR.
Italy—JOSEPH MAZZINI.

Yours, faithfully, for the freedom and progress of the peoples,
RHINE CHILD.

The "Equal Nuisance" Once More.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Every fresh tide brings to our shore on the outer Bay of New-York a supply of dead horses, dogs, cattle, &c., which not only destroys the pleasure of our country places, but becomes detrimental to health. We left New-York on account of filth, dust and stench, but are followed by the above greater evil. Have we no power in the City or State to prevent such a nuisance?

RAY COTTAGE, Leonardsville, N. J.

[We have repeatedly called attention to the shameful nuisance complained of by our correspondent. Some day the authorities will, perhaps, take proper steps to render these complaints unnecessary.]

Another "Job."

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Allow me to call your attention to the job of widening Park-place from College-place to the North River. The abstract of awards and assessments with the map can be seen at the office of the Department of Public Works, and a greater swindle has not been perpetrated in the street-opening line. Three blocks of Robinson-street are widened; the awards are about $260,000, and the assessments, I am informed, are nearly $1,000,000. If you can ventilate the matter you will confer a favor upon the public and oblige a constant reader and victim of "Tweed & Co."

Newspaper Courtesy in California.

"It is a source of genuine pleasure," says the San Francisco (Cal.) Morning Call, "in perusing the newspaper Press of this State, to mark the great change that has taken place in its tone in the last few months. The scurrilities heretofore by the civil war, and the prevalence of strong party feeling, have given place, in most instances, to the proper suicais cordiale. We refer particularly to the interior Press, where a higher average of talent will be found than in any other State of the Union. Subjects involving widely different opinions are now discussed with a fairness and freedom from invective which greatly dignify the editorial profession."

Nearly all the sales of Gold were at 112 ⅞ cent., as against 113¾@112¼ on Friday. The speculation in the Gold Room is dull. The Foreign Exchanges in large supply and cheaper than for many weeks past. Bankers on London 60 days were done at 109¼@109⅝ ⅞ cent., and we hear of even lower sales in round sums. The Exports of Specie for the week amount $1,345,408, of which $697,000 is in American Gold Coin. The Treasury Office received Customs during the week, $3,031,633; paid out, $208,930 for Gold Interest on the Public Debt, and sold $1,000,000 on Wednesday last. The Banks again lose on their Gold averages $1,946,427, which brings the present total below fifteen millions. They gain $355,404 in Greenbacks. Their general line of Deposits is $2,618,714 lower than last Monday, and their Loans $1,281,000 lower. Money left off easy at 5@6 ⅞ cent. on call loan, and 7 ⅞ cent. on Merchant paper of short date.

On the Stock Exchange the Public Funds were steady on a moderate business at the lower quotations made on Friday Afternoon. The 5-20s of 1867, 110¾@110¾ ⅞ cent. The State Bonds were also steady. The Pacific Bonds a little lower than on Friday on both Unions and Centrals, but both in fair demand. The Railway speculation continues unsettled by the collision early in the week between the leading Bull and Bear operators. The latter promise a war to the "bitter end" on all the Stocks in which the former are known to be interested, and this war is already fiercely opened on Ohio and Mississippi Stock, the transfers of which for the annual election have just been closed. The price fell to 23¼@22¼ ⅞ cent. New-York Central is down to 92 ⅞ cent., while Rock Island has advanced on the bearish excitement to 115¼ ⅞ cent. After the late Board the following quotations were made as compared with Friday night, the market leaving off dull, but at rather steady figures:

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

HARVEY FISK, A. S. HATCH.

OFFICE OF FISK & HATCH,
BANKERS AND FINANCIAL AGENTS
OF THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD AND ALL ITS BRANCHES,
No. 5 NASSAU-ST.,
NEW-YORK, Sept. 24, 1870.

☞ FIVE-TWENTY BONDS ARE SELLING today at an average of 111⅞, and at this price it the Government should allow them to run five years—they pay only three and three-quarter per cent. per annum.

SIXES OF 1881, TEN-FORTIES AND CURRENCY, at present prices, pay only four and a half per cent. interest per annum.

CENTRAL PACIFIC SIXES, into which so many are now wisely converting their Five-twenties and other Government bonds, are today selling at 90 to 90¼ flat, that is—the three months' interest now accrued goes to the purchaser—pay, at this rate, seven per cent. per annum.

We say "wisely," and for the following reasons: The main line is finished, fully equipped, with no floating debt, and is worth over one hundred million dollars; the sixes are a first mortgage on this property; they cannot be increased, and the amount is only $32,000,000; the gross earnings from Jan. 1 to Sept. 1, were $5,017,806 72, and for the first fifteen days in September reached $422,325, and will reach fully the enormous sum of $8,000,000 this year; the net earnings on their local business alone are enough to pay the interest in these bonds without taking into account at all their immense through business; their receipts this year for corresponding months are twenty-five to thirty per cent. more than last year, and we have no doubt the increase will be fully in this proportion the coming year.

We have known all about the affairs of the road from its commencement, and that the men connected with it are careful and prudent business men; and, in short, we have no hesitation in recommending holders of Government bonds to make the exchange.

The difference of about 26 per cent. is a safe profit.

The bonds bear interest six per cent., January and July, both principal and interest payable in New-York City, dollar for dollar, in United States gold coin.

FISK & HATCH.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

The project of a Congress of European Powers on the war is revived by Continental writers for the London journals, but Prussian opposition to intervention is held in London to dispose of this, and leave no other alternative, if the negotiations have really failed, than a war of extermination. A Berlin dispatch says that on Monday and Tuesday a conference was held between Count BISMARCK and M. JULES FAVRE, which was devoted wholly to an attempt to arrange a truce pending the meeting of the Constituent Assembly. M. VON BISMARCK demanded the surrender of Strasbourg, Toul and Verdun, so as to insure the communications of the German forces during the truce. M. FAVRE declined these demands. The Tours journals say M. FAVRE and his colleagues are united in the rejection of the Prussian conditions. La France says peace would be impossible on such terms. Other journals say that any terms reached should have to be submitted to a European Congress which would meet at Brussels. The Journal of St. Petersburg denies that French obstinacy is encouraged by the neutral Powers, and declares that Russia approves the terms dictated by Prussia. M. THIERS held a protracted interview with the Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs on Saturday, in Vienna, and then set out for St. Petersburg. The proclamation suspending the municipal and Constituent Assembly elections is said to be well received by the people.

Our London correspondent telegraphs this morning, that the reports of fighting between the troops and the populace in Paris are discredited there, as well as the reported pillaging of the residences of absentees. It is agreed that the National Guards of Paris are too numerous and too much interested in the preservation of order for the socialists to resort to arms; and that the Prussians invent these stories for effect upon the rest of France. The reports are repeated, however, by way of Brussels, in a dispatch of Saturday, in which it is said constant conflicts had been in progress since Friday between the Red Republicans and the troops of Gen. TROCHU, but no details are given. Ministers GAMBETTA and FERRY, in a letter from Paris to Minister CHEMIEUX at Tours, say that Paris is prepared to make a heroic resistance, all parties being united to sustain the Government of Defense. They also urge that should the Prussians report disturbances in Paris, to deny the reports. They say they have enormous forces of Garde Nationales and Mobiles, and troops of the line, with munitions and provisions for the entire Winter, and they call upon France to make a heroic effort. According to a Brussels dispatch, improvements have been made in the fortifications of Paris at some points, under the direction of Gen. RIFLEY, of the United States. Communication with the outside world is still carried on by means of balloons, one of which succeeded in descending safely at Evreux, having run the gauntlet of a sharp fusilade and artillery fire from the Prussians. It is represented that great vigilance is observed, and rigid discipline enforced within the city, to guard against surprise, which the Prussians are believed to be preparing for. The head-quarters of the German forces investing Paris are as follows: The King's at Meaux; Prince ALBERT'S at Brunoy; the Crown Prince of Prussia's at Fontainebleau; the Crown Prince of Saxony's at Bessons, and Gen. VON FALKENSTEIN'S at Choisy-le-Roi.

The letter of Gen. WERDER in the Indépendance Belge, is regarded as having given a fatal blow to the Napoleonic dynasty, in showing that the Emperor did not even trust to strike the head of his army, but rather sacrificed the last chance of saving the army to his personal safety. The London Times indorses the stories of the "perfidy and selfishness" of the Imperial family, but it is said that the Bazaine and Orléans Imperial are handsomely provided for from the proceeds of operations in expropriations in Paris under Baron HAUSSMANN, in which the Empress was largely interested, either through an American agent and speculator attached to the Court. The Empress and Prince Imperial have removed from Hastings to Chislehurst, where a house had been hired for them. Their pensions is said to be ignored by Queen VICTORIA.

A Berlin dispatch says that by the fall of Toul the Prussians captured 109 officers and 2,840 men, 192 guns, forty-eight rifled cannon and 3,000 rifles, together with large supplies of war material. A decree for a levy en masse, is intended by the Government, and all men in Towns have begun to drill. The French Transatlantic Steam-ship Company has established their head-quarters at St. Nazaire, but it will dispatch its steamer from Havre to New-York by way of Cowes. A meeting to express sympathy with France was held in London on Saturday night, but it was a failure. In a letter before the Social Science Congress in London, on Saturday, Earl RUSSELL maintains troops armed and organized, and ships armed and manned, only, are prohibited by international law from leaving neutral ports, and that arms and coal are not contraband of war.

A report comes by way of Beauvais and Tours that a battle was raging about Paris all day Saturday, and that the peasants were cutting off Prussian supply trains in their rear.

The Case of Mr. Tilden.

The World comes to the defense of Mr. TILDEN for presiding over the assemblage of knaves, who met the other day in Rochester, and who robbed each other on the way home. It contends that if Mr. TILDEN spoke of centralization in connection with the King of Prussia and Count BISMARCK, it was only because centralization was the theme which is or ought to be just now most interesting to the citizens of this State, and the King of Prussia and Count BISMARCK are showing what kind of thing it is. But granting all that the World says about the "designs of the Radicals" to be true; supposing even that the Republican leaders really wish to establish "imperialism" in the United States—we wish to assure the public that the World and Mr. TILDEN are, nevertheless, trying to humbug them in the grossest manner. As long as the United States possess no standing army, and confine themselves, as the World must acknowledge they still do, to the performance of only a very small number of the duties with which other Governments are usually charged—as long as their Courts have jurisdiction of only one small class of crimes, and Congress confines its practical work to a small portion of the legislation of the country—centralization must at best be a very slow process. Mr. TILDEN and the World will hardly deny that, considering the extent of this country, the character and habits of the population, the enormous mass of interests, which are still managed by the towns, counties, and States, and the complete dependence of the General GOVERNMENT on the several States for its armed force, it will take, on a very moderate calculation, from one hundred to one hundred and fifty years to establish "imperialism" in the United States. It took about five hundred years to build up the French monarchy; it has taken one hundred and fifty years to provide for FREDERICK WILLIAM of Prussia the splendid position he now enjoys; it took about seven hundred years to establish imperialism in ancient Rome, and Venice enjoyed about six hundred years of real republicanism before the State became an oligarchy. In fact, we do not see how any rational man, notwithstanding all the authorities like the World and Mr. TILDEN can possibly look for an Emperor in Washington, supposing G. to tend in that direction as fast as any nation has ever done, before the year 2000, at the very earliest. We ourselves, after making full allowance for the increased impetus given to events by the railroad and the telegraph, would not set it down earlier than the year 2500, but we don't wish to appear too sanguine, or too fossil in our own opinion, and are accordingly willing to set the year 2000, as that in which the purest hopes of humanity on this continent will be blighted—the States governed by Prefects, the Mayors appointed at Washington, and the World read over every night before publication by an unhappy, but sometimes amused, censor.

It will thus be seen that at the very worst this generation has a very small interest in imperialism or centralization. It is almost certain that things will go on very much as they are during our lifetime. Our liberties may be undergoing destruction, but the process is sure to be slow, and indeed almost imperceptible. Of course we can and ought to do something to stop it, but even if we did our best we could not do much. The greater part of the work must necessarily fall on our descendants of the next eight or ten generations. We accordingly invite the World, Mr. SAMUEL J. TILDEN, and all others whom it may concern, to dismiss imperialism from their minds for the present and turn their attention to the government of this City and this State as it now is; to the mode in which the Governor, Aldermen and Common Councilmen are elected; to the kind of men who fill those offices; and to the manner in which they fill them. These are present and pressing subjects of consideration. They are before us now, and have been before us for some time, and deeply concern every human being living in the State of New-York. We also respectfully urge these gentlemen to dismiss from their minds, for the present, the King of Prussia, the Chancellor of the North German Confederation, the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, the Khan of Bokhara, and all other foreign princes and potentates. These are all separated from us by thousands of miles of raging sea and foreign territory. Their doings and sayings only affect us as members of the human family. About our opinion of them, they do not care one cent, and would as soon have the World and Mr. TILDEN cursing them as singing their praise. WILLIAM M. TWEED, JOHN T. HOFFMAN, JAMES FISK, Jr., and divers others like them, we have, on the contrary, here with us. They are not remote dangers; they are actual calamities. They are not merely likely to rule over us, but now do rule over us. The growth of their imperialism, or centralization, or whatever the World pleases to call it, has been rapid beyond the example even of oriental history. No Caliph, or Kahn, or Cæsar has ever risen to power or opulence more rapidly than TWEED. Ten short years ago, this monarch was pursuing the humble occupation of a chair-maker in an obscure street in this City. He now rules this State as NAPOLEON ruled France, or the MEDICI ruled Florence, not by the same machinery, but with much the same results. He names the Governor of the State just as certainly as NAPOLEON named the Prefect of the Seine. His "civil list" bears a larger proportion to the State revenues than NAPOLEON'S bore to those of France. His immediate personal followers are a more despicable and unclean herd than has ever surrounded the paltriest Asiatic despot. And there he sits today, pocketing our money, and laughing at us.

Whatever be the tendency that brought about this state of things, the World must admit it has been a pretty rapid movement, and we repeat that, in the presence of this state of things, it was outrageous—we use the word deliberately—for a man of Mr. TILDEN'S standing—whom men of character meet every day in social intercourse, and who professes to be and is a man of honor—to go to Rochester and open the proceedings of the pack of rascals who went through the forms of a political convention in that city last week. We say it was an insult to his friends and neighbors, and to every honest man in the City. He knows he sat there simply as a cover for fraud and robbery of the worst kind. He ought not, after having done it, to be able to drive past TWEED'S new house and garden on Fifth-avenue without blushing and hanging his head. He knows where the ex-chairmaker got the means of paying for that mansion; and knowing it, how could he dare to sit in a "convention," the sole object of which was to put fresh plunder in the recreant mechanic's pockets, and protract the reign of a pack of cheats over his fellow-citizens?

Is Gov. Hoffman an Honest Man?

The Express having boasted the other day of Gov. HOFFMAN'S independence of character and devotion to the public interests, we put the following plain questions to it: Did Gov. HOFFMAN sign the Erie bill? Was not that bill designed to cheat honest men and women out of their own, and fill the pockets of TWEED, FISK, and others? To these inquiries the Express replies with another set of questions, namely: "Did not a Republican Senate pass the Erie Railway bill? Did not a Republican Assembly pass the Erie Railway bill? Could the Erie Railway bill have become a law if these Republican bodies had not passed it?"

The Express knows as well as we do the circumstances under which the bill in question was smuggled through the Legislature. The measure was one of the most deceitful ever submitted to any legislative body. Its real object was carefully wrapped up, and the Tweed faction, who were pressing the bill forward, went about the House and Senate assuring members that it was only designed to protect the Erie Road from "foreign competition." All this was explained at the time by the careful writer who is accustomed to watch the proceedings at Albany for this journal. He informed our readers that, after the bill had passed, a well-known Senator declared to him that he would not have voted for it had he known its true character. In short, the bill was huddled through both branches of the Legislature by fraud, and we candidly believe that the Express is ignorant of the fact.

But Gov. HOFFMAN cannot plead ignorance of the full purpose and intent of this infamous bill. He signed it with his eyes open. We warned him in ample time of the irreparable mischief he would do to his own reputation if he obeyed the commands of the Tweed clique, and affixed his signature to the bill. The Legislature adjourned on May 19. The Governor kept the bill by him nearly a fortnight, during which time we exposed the meaning of its provisions, and entreated the Governor to veto it. The hand which had exposed many abuses since the first number of this journal was laid before the public, and which all our readers were familiar with, penned a long appeal to Gov. HOFFMAN in the TIMES of May 5, 1869. We beg the reader's attention to two passages from this article—which, we repeat, was written sixteen days before the bill was signed:

"We are not without hopes that he (the Governor) will be equal to the emergency, and do his duty by vetoing this bill, if its passage shall be entered this session, as seems likely. The eyes of thousands of Erie stockholders keenly, but of earnest thinking men, alarmed at the scenes enacted at the Assembly and in some of the Courts, are upon him. If by yield to their case, his rising reputation, beyond the merely adulation of party, will vanish; but if, from no that high sense of duty, of which he has given such unmistakable evidence, the veto will give him a great flight of courage and fidelity which hereafter will stand above all hope of extinction.

"The path of honor and duty between such landmarks seems plain to us. It is an occasion to illustrate the vital utility of the veto power. It is a trial in the career of a rising young officer, in which to demonstrate on a conspicuous scene how greatly the moral courage, the noble sense of duty and the broad statesmanship of one man may rise over a dark sea of corporate, judicial and legislative infidelity, or how hopelessly and meanly he may sink beneath its slimy waters."

We have never swerved from our course in relation to this wicked measure for enabling a few men to rob the shareholders of the Erie Road in the name of the law. We were sued for libel, and the damages were laid at a million of dollars. That trick failed, as many others have failed since, to secure our silence. The public knows well that our record is straightforward and consistent. As for the Republicans in the Legislature at the time the bill was passed, we say that they were kept in ignorance of the real objects of the measure—an ignorance which cannot be pleaded in extenuation of Gov. HOFFMAN'S offense. And we repeat that Gov. HOFFMAN, having once degraded himself to become a mere tool in the hands of TWEED and FISK—and that on a most important occasion—no one can have any confidence in him for the future. Projects of fresh robbery are now on foot, as we shall shortly reveal to the public; and it is of the utmost consequence that we should have an honest man in the Governor's chair, and not an agent of TWEED and FISK, "Jr."

Wanted—A Leader.

The hour of supreme necessity has come for France, and the man is wanting. There are talkers enough, voluble, eloquent and defiant. Talkers of the first order, like VICTOR HUGO, with interjectional appeals to the heart of universal humanity, and the infinite abysses of human consciousness generally; or JULES FAVRE, forensic and spirit-stirring, though, diplomatically, not persuasive; of the second order, like ROCHEFORT, acrid, epigrammatic, and uncompromising; or of the third order, like GIRARDIN, et hoc genus omne, whose eloquence may be most fitly compared to the tones of the typical Gallic cock, combining a maximum of confidence with a minimum of intelligibility. Soldiers there are, of no mean fame, such as TROCHU, of stainless reputation, and great constructive ability, and BAZAINE, of reputation by no means stainless, but of undoubted military honor and talent. Statesmen, too, are left to France, such as might well guide the destinies of a period less critical and exceptional; but in this, as in every other of the existing departments of State, there is a noteworthy lack of a central figure of sufficient distinctness and power to become the fit exponent of all that there is of self-reliance and patriotism among a great and generous people. The real centre of a popular government is, of course, the people itself. But the people would forever remain an abstraction, unless represented and embodied in the chosen instruments of their will. France wants a man like CROMWELL, and she can only find a ROCHEFORT.

Frenchmen have been delivered from a personal Government which stifled individual energy, and demoralized the noblest impulses of the people, only to find themselves in the midst of a crisis which calls for the highest type of individual ability, and which fails to yield the man it ought to have called forth. There is a pent-up energy throbbing in the veins of the new Republic, which one who was at once a soldier, a statesman, and a natural ruler of men might bring together and direct with irresistible force against the enemies of her country. The men who fought like lions in 1793, and who have since, more than once, stood to be mowed down in the streets of Paris, are not to be ground down by the iron heel of invasion into the position of a nation existing on sufferance. But they need a man in whom the aspirations of a free State could centre, and who, like our own WASHINGTON, could guide a people through the darkest hour of danger, only to stand as the foremost citizen of a commonwealth in which, in the eyes of the law, all were equal. Every day that the war is protracted on the basis which has been defined as the limit of Prussian demands, it must become more savage and more pregnant with future evil. Let the bitterest disasters that could well befall a nation be forced upon France, and even when her power of resistance is utterly broken, she will only have become like a freshly-caged tiger, thirsting for the hour of deliverance and vengeance. It would be difficult to say at what point the ability of Prussia to impose her demands upon France may stop short; it is not difficult to assume that there is a point beyond which neither policy, humanity, nor the inalienable rights of man could warrant them being pushed.

The point, most undoubted observers are inclined to thinking, lies somewhat within the last-reported ultimatum of King WILLIAM.

Three "Settled Issues" Again.

The Rochester Convention was, of course, disingenuous in reference to the national issues involved in the canvass. The following resolution is only one among many proofs of its incompetency and bad faith:

"That as many of the issues which have divided good citizens in the past are now settled, we invite all conservative citizens, irrespective of former political differences, to unite with us in securing the second step in the Government of the principle on which it was established, and which, when continued by the majority of the American people, secured peace and prosperity for all."

A party which desires to deal fairly with the people would state explicitly what issues "which have divided good citizens in the past are now settled," instead of leaving the phrase open to as many constructions as there are sections in the party itself. True, the Rochester gathering only imitates in its vagueness the address of the Congressional Democratic Committee, which, while suggesting silence in regard to "dead issues," carefully abstained from any specific allusion to their nature. The same purpose animated the Committee and the Convention. Both were anxious to wear the semblance of moderation, while both were afraid of the hostile influences which a distinct recognition of Republican measures, as accomplished facts, would awaken within the Democratic ranks.

If the New-York Democrats desire it to be understood that the many issues which are now settled involve the series of measures known as the Reconstruction acts, and the Constitutional Amendments growing out of them, why not so state in terms that admit of no misunderstanding? The World has been trying to persuade its friends that expediency dictates acquiescence in these acts and amendments, but with an ill-luck that must have been discouraging. The necessity for our contemporary's entreaties implies that even in its opinion the questions are not regarded by the Democratic Party as settled; and the notorious failure of all attempts in this direction is proof positive that the party does not admit the settlement.

Upon this point, indeed, the evidence is conclusive. For it is a fact that not a single Democratic Convention held this Fall has, in terms, affirmed acquiescence in reconstruction as now it stands, or in the validity of the several Constitutional Amendments. The Louisiana Convention stands alone in the declaration, "That we accept and acquiesce in the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in good faith,"—a declaration which, though good as far as it goes, covers only a portion of the ground. No other Democratic Convention, however, has gone even thus far. On the contrary, the Tennessee Convention refused to entertain a resolution setting forth that the doctrine and right of secession are dead; and the Maine Convention referred to reconstruction solely to denounce the policy on which it rests as an usurpation.

Had those who claim consideration as representatives of the party in this State intended to take a different course—had they really wished to indorse the moderate counsels uttered by the World before that journal surrendered itself to Tammany—the resolution adopted at Rochester would have been of a different character. That it is what it is proves the cowardice of those who, though themselves willing to acquiesce in Republican action, are yet afraid to say so, and the double-dealing of the Convention, which hoped by duplicity to conciliate the moderates without incurring the animosity of the extremists. This circumstance alone would show that the ultraists are the more formidable of the two factions.

Treasure Trove.

The newly-discovered diamond fields in South Africa, if report be true, must nearly realize the marvels related in the Arabian Nights, of Sinbad's enchanted valley. They are even much more alluring than those of the story, as they are more accessible than the latter—which, the reader will remember, in addition to being infested with numbers of the most venomous serpents, were shut in by precipitous mountains. But here we have a real bona fide enchanted valley, so rich in gems that for scores of years to come, it is estimated, the precious store can scarcely be exhausted, and with no serpents worth mentioning. At least we find none mentioned in the published accounts, and infer that if they exist they have shown their proverbial wisdom by declining to interfere with the necessities of commerce. What is more wonderful still, among the hundreds of people gathered to this curious harvest, there is less fighting than diversifies a primary election or a trip to Coney Island. For once, the auri sacra fames seems to have failed in its wonted inspiration of battle and blood. There they dig peacefully side by side, these patient husbandmen, for such fruits as the earth has surely never yielded up since the plowshare first vexed her patient bosom. If one luckier than his neighbors finds a stone that might serve for a king's ransom, and makes him at one stroke rich beyond his wildest hopes, the rest are animated by the sight, not to malice and murder, but to more vigorous exertions. It is like a picture of the golden age.

It produces a strange sensation to read of these priceless jewels lying as thick as pebbles on the sea-shore. Diamonds have been found of thirty carats weight, and of thousands of pounds value. It requires more than Horatian philosophy to look without emotion upon such stories as these. And it would not be surprising if, when this discovery is generally known, South Africa should become the objective point of such another tide of invasion as swept over the Pacific Slope when California was first found to realize the fabled El Dorado. Fraiel River is no further from New-York now than San Francisco was in the memorable days of '48. It is but a month or so of ocean voyaging, and then all Golconda lies at our feet. And all the necessaries of life are there infinitely more accessible and cheap than they were in California in the early times. Meat, for instance, is plentiful and good at four and five cents a pound, and other things in proportion. If much of our restless floating population does not drift speedily to Frazel River, it will be because its magnificent promise is too obscure, or so prodigious as to seem incredible.

Americans of some sort, however, sooner or later, will be sure to find their way thither, and with them, we fear, will cease the tranquillity of the little settlement. With them will appear those most efficient of mining tools, the bowie-knife and the revolver. But, with these weapons, they will bring their ingenuity and energy, and these advantages may somewhat compensate for any little eccentricities of behavior.

Mr. PETER COOPER is a gentleman of whom everybody ought to speak with the utmost respect. His sincere desire to reform the abuses under which the citizens of New-York are laboring cannot be questioned. But Mr. PETER COOPER, like other people, may be deceived by false representations. He was led into assisting the Tammany leaders to overthrow their opponents in the fight over the new City charter. He, in common with many others, was persuaded that TWEED and his underlings meant to keep their promises. Mr. COOPER has now seen enough to show him what sort of changes we may look for. Is he satisfied with the prospect? If he is, we should be glad if he would explain to the public the grounds of his satisfaction, so that they may be reassured under the bad omens which now surround them.

The Tax Commissioners wrote to us, yesterday, to deny that they are the tools of the "Ring." Yet they have at least connived at the fraud on the tax-payers which is involved in lowering the rate of taxation, while raising the values of property to suit themselves. How many citizens find their houses unduly assessed this year? If that question could be fully answered, it would soon be seen whether our charges against the Commission are well founded or not. The Commissioners say they favor nobody. Will they tell us how much real estate is now owned by TWEED & Co. on this island, and what taxes are paid upon it? We should like to compare the valuations placed on the property of these men with the valuations placed upon similar property not owned by the Ring. Have the Commissioners the courage to give us the material for such a comparison?

We are sorry our remarks upon Tammany misgovernment have had the effect of taking the "breath away" from the Citizen & Round Table, for our contemporary is generally very amusing, and knows how to use its breath to good purpose. It is as familiar with local politics as with topics relating to natural history—and that is saying a great deal. But when it says that Gov. HOFFMAN signed the Erie Directors' bill by accident, and that "not a protest was made against the act before the bill was passed," it falls into temporary forgetfulness, such as it is never guilty of when it discourses most pleasantly about birds, beasts and fishes. We protested against the Erie bill before it was passed, and after its passage we over and over again exhorted the Governor to veto it. Let the Citizen read the extracts from one of our articles given in another column. Our contemporary knows very well what tickling trout means. Does it want to try the effect of that process upon its readers? If so, we are afraid it is losing its time.

We publish this morning some fresh evidence as to the "honest intentions" of the Tammany "Ring" in relation to the approaching elections. We have all been repeatedly told that the Democratic chiefs fully meant to give us a fair election this Fall. Our readers may now see for themselves how this promise is likely to be kept. A large number of rascals have been placed upon the City pay-roll for use on election day. Nominal employment has been found for them meanwhile, but their real work is to come. It remains to be seen whether the new Election law can be overridden by these means. After all that we have seen of Tammany and its power, we are justified in assuring our Republican friends that it is only by the exercise of great courage and vigilance that they can hope to render the law triumphant, and frustrate the elaborate preparations of Mr. TWEED and his friends.

Yesterday being a day of rest, a considerable number of persons from the suburbs came over to New-York for the purpose of looking at the Lincoln statue in Union-square. Most of them departed with a look of anguish on their faces; but the object on the pedestal afforded the greatest satisfaction to a crowd of street boys who surrounded it all day long. It must be fancy, of course; but somehow the expression of the statue seems to alter. Yesterday it appeared to be gazing sternly at the Chinese doctor who lives just opposite, and who tried in vain to stare it out of countenance. The statue had its hand clenched convulsively upon its diaphragm, as if indicating that it had recently tried Chinese medicines, and did not find them agree very well with its system. The effigy is evidently fully conscious of the painful position it occupies. Grown-up people mock at it, and children cry and beg to be carried home. Nothing will persuade them that it is not the original of that malignant being who notoriously waits behind the door to punish juvenile misdeeds. How long is this dreadful article to remain in Union-square? Why does not the man who stole Mr. TILDEN'S watch come along and commit larceny upon it? An address of thanks from all the inhabitants of Union-square, including the Chinese doctor, would be immediately presented to him for his trouble.

Detailed accounts of the loss of the British iron-clad Captain fully bear out the conjectures we made at the time of the catastrophe as to its real causes. The only point of difference is that the responsibility of those who designed, built and sent her to sea is much greater than we cared to assume. Criticism may now be inopportune, since some of them have paid the fault with the penalty of their life, but the reflection naturally occurs how grossly incompetent must be the practical officials of the most extravagant of the State Departments of Europe, to permit so gross an outrage upon naval stability to be perpetrated without interposing a more decided protest. It is abundantly evident that in the ill-fated Captain there were some still graver miscalculations than that connected with her weight.

England has got her chronic fit of Russophobia again. The band of Asiatic barbarians that squatted in Europe and called themselves the Ottoman Empire, remain, after the lapse of centuries, barbarians still. But it suits England better to have the Dardanelles in the possession of a rotten State, whom she holds in tutelage, than commanded by a rival and aggressive Power. Hence the Eastern question is again begining to eclipse in the British mind the interest of the death-struggle in France, and of the Pope's mock pretensions at home.

The Brooklyn Union is one of those papers which delight in repeating little tales about their contemporaries. Its wise cracks out of late this gossip is wide of the truth, and a little inquiry would prove it to be so. On Friday evening the Union published a paragraph in relation to this journal. There was not a particle of truth in it, and it is to be hoped our contemporary will take some trouble to get at the facts before it fusion itself again in other people's affairs.

WASHINGTON.

Return of Absent Officials—President Grant and the Missouri Republicans—Affairs in North Carolina—The Alleged Abolition of the Interior Department—Yellow Fever at the South.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—The President will arrive here on Friday next, Sept. 30, and business at the White House will be formally resumed at the beginning of the next week. The renovation of the Executive Mansion, preparatory to its reoccupancy by the President's family, is nearly complete. Secretary BOUTWELL will be here to-morrow morning to resume his duties at the Treasury. After an absence of seven or eight weeks, Acting Secretary RICHARDSON, who has also been Acting Attorney-General, left last evening for Massachusetts, via Long Branch, from which place he will have the President for a fellow-traveler, who visits that state to place his child on at school. By the close of the current week the President and all the Cabinet will have returned, save Secretary COX, who has but recently left for a brief absence, after having remained in the city through the Summer.

PRESIDENT GRANT AND THE MISSOURI REPUBLICANS.

It is believed here, and the belief is based on very good authority, that on the return of the President to the city he will make a close inspection of the political situation in Missouri. And when he determines upon whom rests the responsibility for the disruption of the Republican Party in that State, which now seems imminent, he will make a note of it and act accordingly. The President is known to be in favor of liberal reforms, both in Government and in the franchise, but he believes that these reforms should be carried on inside the party, and that the continued ascendency of liberal ideas in the party renders it wholly unnecessary for a set of disorganizers to attempt to force their reforms by handing a whole State over to the Democracy. Unless the signs fail, there will be some heads in the basket among Missouri office-holders before long.

THE NORTH CAROLINA TROUBLES.

All the troops sent to North Carolina to restore order there have returned, save three companies, which remain one each at Raleigh, Yanceyville and Graham. Four or five of the prisoners arrested by order of Gov. HOLDEN are still held, the Court refusing to release them on habeas corpus. The Court has also ordered that full testimony be taken as to the origin and character of the troubles, and the military officers who have just returned from there express the opinion that this will result in the vindication of Gov. HOLDEN'S course.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

The alleged abolition of the Interior Department, through the too general wording of the repealing clause of the act of July last revising the Patent laws, is not likely to cause any serious trouble. Although a literal or technical interpretation of the clause in question may repeal the act of 1849 by which the Interior Department was organized, yet the intent of the law, which is always considered, was certainly not to abolish one of the Executive Departments. There is, therefore, no danger that the Secretary will cease to exercise his functions, or that the business of the Department will be suspended.

YELLOW FEVER AT THE SOUTH.

Intelligence is received here to-night to the effect that a quarantine of twenty-five days has been laid at Galveston, and that MORGAN'S New-Orleans line of steamers had consequently ceased running. The yellow fever is believed to be rapidly increasing on the Southern coast. A private letter from Mobile, received last night, says that at the date of writing there were thirty cases reported in that city, and that the disease was spreading.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Sickness in Havana—General Increase of Taxation—War News—The New Cable.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, Sept. 17, 1870.

If the world needed additional proof of the dwindling of the insurrection in Cuba, it may be found in the circumstance that the Voz de Cuba and El Diario, journals of this city, devote to it so small space in their column—not one quarter that formerly filled with details of operations had and opinions as to what might occur. Even the volunteers talk less; their loyalty is less effervescent, and ultra Spaniards of all classes are less violent. Perhaps the sickness prevailing here has something to do with this apparent stagnation of feeling, for truly disease is rife in Havana now-a-days. Vomito is a resident with us, and consequently attracts little attention, fatal as it is. Cholera begets fear in the minds of many, and increasing rapidly for the past two weeks, it now assumes alarming proportions. Official accounts of deaths from cholera would seem to denote that the disease was mild, but the journals published this morning articles regarding the best methods of treatment, &c., &c., and well-informed townsmen place the number of deaths daily at one hundred or more. The disease is of a fatal character, proving fatal generally in less than twelve hours. Many of the corpses are taken from the houses at night to the cemetery in order to avoid notice, but the move is, however, a bad one, for as these people live out of doors a great deal, especially in the evening, and as interments usually take place either in the early morning or during the afternoon, before dark, and never, except in cases of epidemics, at night, funeral processions at night call attention.

TAXATION.

Los Leales in Cuba are taxed quite as much as at any previous time. A new law relating to the various uses (and they are legion) of stamped paper, taking effect Dec. 1, published in these days, has produced general dissatisfaction among all classes. It covers everything—the merchant, retail dealer, tradesman, professional man, in fact all who need account books must have them stamped at so much a leaf. Letters to the authorities must also be written on stamped paper; bills of exchange, whether drawn here or in foreign countries, if payable here; receipts and documents of every description must be stamped.

WAR NEWS.

Reports from the various military departments in the insurrectionary districts give as the total loss to the insurgents during the past fifteen days, 300 killed,

THE CHURCHES.

Expressions from the Pulpit on the Topics of the Day.

Recent Events in the Eternal City—Free Religion for the Masses—The Horrors of War and the Influences of Religion—Reception of Delegates from Abroad to the Evangelical Alliance.

The churches were filled to overflowing yesterday. All the pastors and all the congregations have returned from the country, and all yesterday they wished they hadn't—it was so sultry and so close in the sanctuaries. The streets—and notably Fifth-avenue—about church-time were filled with fashionably-dressed people, and Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. The "openings" of the modistes, and of the religious temples in the Fall, by a singular and happy coincidence, occur about the same time, so that the good people hereabouts are enabled to show their piety in the cut of their clothes as well as in the lining of their pews. The sermons, yesterday, were generally doctrinal, and although of grave import to those who heard them, may hardly find place, with propriety, in the columns of a newspaper. Those that have anything in the nature of news in them are reported below. Contrary to the general expectation, there was hardly any allusion in the Roman Catholic pulpits to the occupation of Rome by the Italian forces.

EVENTS AT ROME.

The Vatican Council and the Italian Occupation of Rome—Discourse by Right Rev. P. N. Lynch, Bishop of Charleston.

Right Rev. P. N. Lynch, Bishop of Charleston, lectured last evening in aid of the poor under the care of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, at St. Stephen's Roman Catholic Church, Twenty-eighth-street, on the Vatican Council and the Italian occupation of Rome, before a very large audience.

Bishop Lynch said: My friends, two sounds have come to us in these latter times widely different in their origin, and yet more widely different in their character and effects. On one was God and peace, which spoke of devotion and faith, and union of man with heaven. The other spoke of human passions aroused and carrying desolation. On one side, some hundreds of venerable men who had spent years in the service of God went forth from the central city of the Catholic world, passing north and south, east and west, some of them following the highways of travel, others turning aside and crossing seas and mountains, and deserts. And as each one reached his home, there came forth to meet their priests of the Most High, and the faithful children of the Church gathered around, and there were words of congratulation and happiness, and the bells chimed and the organs and choirs went up joyous strains of Te Deum in thanksgiving to God, who had brought to His children their beloved pastors. Here religion spoke peace and holiness, the spread of Divine revelation; here was the union of earth with Heaven. On the other side we heard the stamping of hundreds of thousands of armed men; we heard the conflict of murderous battles, of cities assailed, of tens of thousands slain, of other tens of thousands wounded. There is fear. The civilized world stands aghast, as it were, at this horror. Here spoke the passions of earth; here men are doing their great work, which will mark this present year—the Council of the Vatican and the grand war between the two most powerful nations of Christendom. Shall these two in any way be connected? Nowadays I think one in a hundred would feel disposed to question it. Many a one who would place them side by side, with the influence can these few hundreds of old men who are now assembled in Rome, in the Vatican Council, exercise at all to be compared with the grand, the great world-results of this gigantic warfare? And yet I remember, as a child, hearing one truth—that the thunder which rocked earth to its summit passed quickly away, but the still voice of the preceptor would sink into the heart and memory, become part of his being, and for years afterward, so long as he lived, would be producing its effects. The world has seen other Councils before that of the Vatican, and the world has seen, alas, too many wars before that which is now raging, and yet history tells us, no matter how furious the war, how great the convulsions of nations seemed at the time, before many years the progress of human life, the advancement of society, peace and tranquillity, would efface the effects and the memories of it. But the world has never seen a Council that has not been a marked event in the history of its progress; it has never seen a Council that has not left an impress on the mind and heart of civilized man. Centuries but engrave them deeper. To-day Nice, Ephesus and Chalcedon speak as they spoke a thousand years back. The war may cease, (God grant it may,) clean quickly, but of this I am sure, that the Vatican Council will ever continue to have its effect and influence on the world. In speaking, therefore, of it I am not speaking of a light or trivial subject; it is one of importance, one that we may all well weigh. What was its object and purpose; what its mode of procedure? What has it already done? What may be looked for in the future from it? What further action will it take? Why was this Council called? Why was revelation given to man? Why is there a divinely-established religion and a divinely-established Church? Experience, reason, revelation, all tell us that man left to the guidance of his own reason and to the governing of his own passions goes on from ruin to ruin. God saw the misery, the errors and the sins of the human race, the evils of the course we were following, and He gave to the world religion that should enlighten our minds and strengthen our hearts, and not a mere abstract religion, but a Church established from almost all quarters of the globe, including Tasmania, Demerara, and Constantinople, and to all of them the immense audience tendered a cordial Christian welcome.

Dr. Adams said this great continent was not concealed from the Old World so long, by the mists and mysteries of the sea, without some object. It awaited the proper season and events, when the persecutions of Christianity would make it necessary as a refuge and a ripe field for the sincere followers of Christ. It was no time for the Christians of this land to bandy their wisdom, but to stand in mute admiration of the things which God is working in Europe, where it has been made plain that Protestantism has sprung to the leadership of the world. The great doctrine of the right of private judgment—that no man or body of men can stand between the soul and its maker—this is the palladium of Christian liberty for which we contend. His soul burned when Abbé Lacombarre style poor France as the only nation which supports the Papacy. She is styled the oldest child of the Church. The surrender at Sedan was made on the spot where an old Huguenot school had stood. We had heard that Protestants had gone into the City of Rome with the army of Victor Emmanuel, and no wonder the brethren present were anxious to return to their fields of European labor. He wished them a hearty Christian farewell, sending with them his prayer that the spirit of God would accompany and bless and prosper their great work.

Rev. James Davis, Secretary of the British Evangelical Alliance, being introduced, said he had been sent as the representative of the Alliance of which he was Secretary, and as such he tendered the right hand of Christian fellowship to those present through their Chairman, not for a day, but for all time. He called attention to the exclamation of David: "How beautiful are thy tents, O Israel," and continued: So Christians from all parts of the world looking toward the grand object of Christian laborers in all countries, must exclaim in the same language: "How beautiful are thy tents, O Israel." They have all one aim, one faith, one destiny and final home. Twenty-six years ago, in England, a union was formed of all evangelical denominations, in order to promote the interests of Christ's kingdom in the bonds of fellowship, by bringing together from different parts of the Kingdom and of the world, those who would not otherwise become acquainted. Union is strength and not only so, but it was found that it was the only means by which universal prayer on any given subject could be secured. Some twelve years ago they sent out their first request for united prayer on a given subject, and in that month of January such a prayer went up in different languages as never before was known on this distracted globe. He gave as instances of two Nestorian Christians who had walked from Russia across the Caucasian Range, and on until they reached Hamburg; thence they came by ship to London, and their first inquiry was where an interpreter could be found—"Where is the Christian Alliance?" Since then not only had persecution ceased of Christians in Russia, but permission has been given for the building of a church. When recently in Rome the speaker carried with him a Bible in Italian, and the officers when searching his baggage took the Bible, telling him he could not take it back with him, and was referred to the Police for redress. There he was told he ought to know better than to have such a book, and he must go out. He subsequently wrote to Cardinal Antonelli, protesting against the act, and asserting his right to read the Gospel in any language he pleased, and intimating that when the matter became known, the public would probably draw a parallel between it and what occurred 1,800 years ago. Then Christ was delivered over to the Roman jailers. Now His Gospel is delivered over to the Roman Police. He subsequently had the satisfaction of receiving his Bible through the British Consul, with the assurance that it had been handed him by Cardinal Antonelli himself. This result was doubtless owing to the fact that the matter had been taken up by the Christian Alliance. In conclusion, he expressed his conviction that a great work was about to take place in rescuing the world from the influences of Romanism; and to the efforts of the Evangelical Alliance, through God, no small part of this great triumph was to be attributed. With heart to heart, hand to hand, in faith and fervent prayer, let us go forth to help those in danger, and God will prosper His work.

Rev. Dr. Ravel, of the Waldense Church in Italy, next addressed the audience. He said he supposed that out of respect to Christopher Columbus and others well known to Americans, he ought to address them in Italian, supposing they would understand him. Italy has now twenty-six millions of inhabitants much enlightened and fully awakened. The Constitution of Italy, Rome included, proclaims liberty of conscience as well as political. Count Cavour himself has said that every constitution which would protect liberty and be enduring, must have as its foundation the right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. In '48 they had six churches, including one at Nice, which had become a part of France, in hopes not long so to remain. In '49-9 they sent missionaries throughout the Italian States, and after the Grand Duke of Tuscany had left, they made a successful effort to establish a seminary in Florence. Though met with some opposition at first, and were threatened with expulsion, yet afterward they succeeded in disarming opposition, and finally located themselves in a barrack erected by a Cardinal. During the past ten years they had gained about 1,000 communicants—the larger portion of whom were from the Roman Church. They had also about 1,600 children of Catholic parents attending day-schools, and about 400 attending Sunday-school. Sunday-schools, however, could never meet the approbation of the Romish Church, for in such schools they knew too well how powerful is the influence in enlightening and liberating the human mind. The conscience of the Catholic is not a natural conscience; it is an artificial conscience. Now, however, Rome is thrown open to freedom of conscience and to the introduction of the Gospel, and our clear duty is to press the Gospel in Rome also. We may meet opposition, for he did not believe that "Man of Sin," that Prince of Darkness, would surrender without a struggle, but they would persevere in this work, assured that as God had preserved them through the dangers and persecutions of the past he would be with them to the end, and bless and prosper their work.

Rev. Mr. Holborn, of London, expressed the great gratification he had in visiting this country. Notwithstanding he was mistaken in coming here to take part in the Alliance, yet he had received no more generous and Christian instruction as made his visit one long to be treasured here. Nowhere was there such freedom of religion as in America. They had not quite reached that point yet in England, but they were trying hard for it. It had not been obtained all at once by Americans; even the Puritans, strange to say, had bigotry in their composition, and he should not return home until he had visited the home of Roger Williams. He hoped on the four corners of the Evangelical Alliance would be written East, West, North and South, embracing all Evangelical Christians, and that the Divine blessing would rest with all who are lovers of the Lord Jesus.

Rev. Dr. Kornig, from Hungary, said there was a time when American sympathy was warm for Hungary in her struggle with Austria on one side and Russia on the other. Up to this day, the Hungarians remember this sympathy with a warmth almost equal to that with which they cherish their Constitution—a Constitution older than that of England. His object in coming here, even after he knew that the Alliance had been postponed, was to prefer the request that the sympathy of Americans given to the political cause of Hungary twenty years ago, might be now transferred to the religious side. The new Constitution of Hungary is such as the warmest friends of liberty could desire. He had seen an exiled patriot of '48 riding in the same carriage with him, who commanded his exiles since the restored Constitution, and a friend remarked that was the first time he had seen the executed and the executioner riding in the same carriage. In 1852, the missionaries were expelled by Francis Joseph, while in 1866 the speaker was graciously received by the same Emperor, and was granted ground and aid for the erection of a Protestant Church. At present there is a Protestant Minister, at the head of the Government as Prime Minister. In Moscow, the congregation over which he presides, has letters from all parts of the world speaking, and services are held in several languages. He concluded by urging the Gospel as the only guarantee of peace, and the only true and lasting international bond.

Dr. Schaffer, of the Secretaries of the Alliance, followed in an able statement of the efforts made for holding the contemplated Alliance, of what its purpose was, and prophesied that when it did take place it would be difficult to obtain a hall in the City sufficiently large to accommodate the vast audience which would assemble to listen to the eloquent, good and learned men, brought together from all parts of the world. He adverted to the success of Protestant Prussia over bigoted and infidel France, and was followed in a few earnest remarks by the venerable Dr. Kelly, from South America.

Prayer was then offered by Rev. John Hall, D. D., and the exercises concluded with the benediction.

GOD'S OMNIPRESENCE.

Reopening of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church—Sermon by Rev. Dr. Foss.

Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, in West Thirty-fourth-street, near Eighth-avenue, was reopened yesterday, having been closed during the Summer months for repairs. The interior, during the vacation, has been renovated thoroughly, and fitted up in such a manner as to render it a very pleasant place of worship. It was announced that the Sunday-school room and the class-rooms would not be in readiness for use until the end of the present week.

After the preliminary services, the pastor, Rev. Dr. Foss, preached a thoughtful sermon from the following text, found in the eighty-seventh psalm, second verse:

"The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob."

The speaker commenced his discourse by saying that some of the ablest philosophers of ancient times believed that God did not interfere with the affairs of men; that He took no interest, either in detail in the aggregate, in those things which more concern our temporal welfare. It was reserved for Divine revelation, and especially that portion of it contained in the New Testament, to inform us that God does take a deep and lively interest in human affairs. He made and fitted up this world for the residence of man. The polishing of every blade of grass, and the giving of the sweet notes of the birds were all for man. Man had been empowered by God to harness the intractable elements to work in his behalf. The general proposition intended to be announced in this text was that the Lord loves his church more than anything else in this world. There can be no proper construction put upon the words, so as to limit it to the Jewish people. The most important places on the earth are the residences of men. The Savior, as his coming broke down all distinctions in regard to politics, race and nationality, that he might be thenceforth neither Jew nor Greek. All races of men are alike with God. The logical beginning of the text is the verbal ending of it. God is interested in the habitations of men. Skeptical philosophers have, and do now, smile at such a doctrine. They talk about "the order of nature," and "the eternal fitness of things," just as though this earth were not fitted up for the whole human race, just as much as a man builds and fits up a house for himself and family. Before the earth was inhabited by man, there were the mastodon, and numberless other monsters which have become extinct. After man there is to be nothing. He will continue until the final grand catastrophe of all things earthly. Man is the last, the crowning work of the Almighty upon our earth. He asked his hearers to think a moment of all God had done for man's benefit before the advent of man, and to think of the mighty convulsions of nature; of the rushing floods and streams that washed down the rich soil from mountain and hillside to the plains below, to render them fertile and fruitful; of the vast forests which grew to maturity and decayed in order to furnish coal to mitigate the rigors of Winter. It was related that Mungo Park, the great and indefatigable African traveler, while once attempting to cross an extensive desert became hungry, thirsty, weary and foot-sore. He threw himself down, thinking that he was forsaken of God and that it was of no use longer to try to escape a lingering and lonely death. He spied a little flower, only one, and that so small that it had escaped his attention until he was lying on the sand. He said to himself, "here is a flower which receives sufficient moisture and other nutriment to enable it to live and bloom amid all this dreary waste and desolation. Surely God is here." This inspired and encouraged him to get up and traveled as best he could, and he had not gone a league before he descried a caravan, and was taken in and saved. There is, said the speaker, no record that angels visited the Pyramids, the Sphinx and other immortal works of art known to the ancients, but they did visit the humble home of Mary, and the sepulchre of the Savior of the world. And yet God's eye was on the men who brought out, little by little, those stupendous works known as the Pyramids of Egypt. God, too, is in every home, in every domestic circle. Dr. Bushnell had said that more than half that is done for the moral and religious welfare of a child is done by the time it is four years of age. This might be an exaggerated statement, but surely it is nearer the truth than is generally supposed. God is in the workshop, the store, the office, and he is also in the tent and the camp and on the battle-field. Yes, he is present with men in war—war, that awful withering, blighting scourge of mankind—war, which in a day scathes and sears all that come within its reach, and scatters its baleful influences so widely, so deeply and terribly that they are felt for centuries. If there is, said the reverend gentleman, a single spot on this planet whereon the eye of God rests more than on another, that place is the City of Paris today. May God grant such a disposition of things in and around that ill-starred city as shall tend for the good of humanity, the spread of civil and religious liberty, and the glory of the cause of Christ. The speaker urged his hearers so to live, that they [illegible] the man. In the steamer there was a beast, [illegible] below the smoke-stack passengers not of the cabin were not permitted to stay there; but we had been ill treated and struck at and we had been compelled to take to the life-boats, all such evil-disposed persons have forgotten, in this grand ship the empire, in which to act all sailing heavenward, do you think God will look upon say on board as steerage passengers? The day for which I have been praying for least years has come at last. No sleep came to my eyes last night, for the joy of this day. For the first time in my life I stand in a church, feeling that the rich and poor, bond and free, meet together and no question for any one to whom he comes from or how much money he's worth. But looking all in the eyes, I see children of immortality, men who are here alike in all the privileges of the gospel. It is good to be here. It would have been a great deal better for me to have stayed in my own and native land. We could have had no easy time, luxuriating in a large house, living quiet, respectable lives. But when the day of judgment comes, and the question was put, "What have you been doing for your fellow-men?" we would have had our own hands to wipe away the crimson stain. The eyes of the whole American church have been on North and South, east and west, are praying for our success. We are raising an important question, whether the gospel can be brought to bear on man without regard to their relations in life. We cannot do it. I believe the day that some new means are tried in order to bring the people under the power of the Gospel. Why, we have allowed Satan to assume as remarkable a power as the Church ever did, fairly been driven out of some strong holds of his dominion, for it is nothing if not a recruiting station. The time has come when, if a man has anything to say for Christ, he had better say it. As for myself, I should be very sorry, say, with the Apostle, that I am willing to become a target for all men, and to be accounted fools for all Christ's sake, if the gospel be not all man; but how can we preach it? They are very precious to hear it. We dedicate this truth today in the first one thus, (pointed on the organ,) that all coming is may see it). One Lord, one faith, one baptism and one heaven. I never had any interest in the sects. Differences that divide Christians, and I have long felt so, that ever. If there is a drop of bigot blood in me, I wish it may be taken out. The reverend gentleman concluded by stating that up to the present time there had not been a dollar asked from any one to defray the expenses of the building, and there would not be now but for a mistake that the Jews to whom they had sold the old church had failed to come to time with their money, which had left them holding on the hands of the trustees. This, he said, would be a slight difficulty; for he felt assured that the money would, $20,000 in all, would be forthcoming. The old edifice will be used for school purposes, and a harmonious feeling growing out of the recent difficulty in the church. A subscription list was then opened, headed by $100 from the pastor. How much was actually subscribed it was impossible to ascertain exactly, but it is believed to be something over $12,000.

The dedicatory prayer was then delivered by Rev. Dr. Butler, after which, having sung the Doxology, the congregation dispersed.

WAR AND CIVILIZATION.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Hepworth at the Church of the Messiah.

The Church of the Messiah, corner of Park-avenue and Thirty-fourth-street, was crowded in every part last night by a most attentive congregation anxious to hear Dr. Hepworth on "War as an Element of Civilization." Dr. Hepworth took for his text Matthew xxiv., 6: "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled, for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet." After alluding to the duties that men owe to each other, and the duty they owe to God, and after condemning the petty quarrels which bring forth strife and bloodshed between nations, Mr. Hepworth asked his hearers to cast their eyes toward the Continent of Europe and see what war was doing there. War was the greatest curse that could befall another; it paralyzed the commerce; deadened industry; destroyed the arts and sciences, and brought untold misery on those directly or indirectly engaged in it. What a picture of it is seen today in France, where the arts and industries are completely destroyed. War is sure to do so, and just as a single hair will stop the entire works of a watch, so will war stop all the industry, the commerce, and the arts and sciences of a nation. In Paris the many brown statues which adorned the public streets and palaces, which were the work of the most artistic hands, are now being molded into bullets to murder the foe outside the walls, and in other places the artillery of the enemy destroy the many splendid works of the architect, and thousands of brave men lie in a cold and untimely grave. This war has been a most wonderful one; we see half a million of the best disciplined soldiers in the world, led by officers thoroughly educated in the science of war—men who have been through a hundred fights—and commanded by Count Moltke, the brightest genius and the most unerring tactician. We see them march steadily on from the banks of the Rhine, and clash their steel and exchange powder with an equally brave foe. They march on without a thought of retreat; their advance is quiet, determined and steady; not one-eighth of an inch of ground is gone back on, and now they sit down with one object in view—the capture of Paris and the dictation of terms to terms until they can themselves dictate terms in the Palace of the Tuileries. War has its horrors that none can describe; but who can picture to himself the scenes that are most probably being enacted today in Paris. These, as is always the case in time of war, the trouble has brought to the surface the evil and depraved in man, and though today it is the Frenchman kills the Prussian and the Prussian shoots the Frenchman, to-morrow, we fear, the telegraph will bring us the melancholy intelligence that Frenchmen are murdering Frenchmen in the streets of Paris. Probably at this very moment, beneath the wide-spreading trees of that city, where the tired workmen are often sought shelter from the heavy of the sun, the violent class are erecting the guillotine, and many a good man and brave man will be led to it, and have to bend his head aside die. And this is, and yet we are told that Christ's spirit is on the brave soldiers of both sides in the various fields of this bloody campaign; can experience their wild enthusiasm when the flag of their country is in danger. When that flag is dimmed with the smoke of the powder, and riddled with countless balls, I can understand the, almost divine heroism which leads the soldier on to rush forward and protect it with his own body. But now fearful the cost of life to both sides is, cannot be contemplated. While the Prussians march steadily on, they will be met by fresh troops, fresh guns, and then there is no distinction. Here lies the French brave; there lies the Prussian warrior. There is no longer strife between them, and the stranger who looks at their still remains can only distinguish the one from the other by the varied cut of their uniforms. They have fought their last battle, and are now in the soldiers' home in heaven, where peace is eternal and where war is unknown. There is still another view to be taken from those quiet graves. Go from the field of battle to the Prussian home beyond the Rhine, and from the scene of slaughter, visit the French home, and then the real horrors begin to show themselves. There will be found 250,000 widows wearing their weeds for the lost ones who went out to battle but a few weeks before in all the pride and strength of manhood; who bade good-by with a smile and promised on returning again to receive a husband's and a father's welcome; but who, alas, will now return no more. These poor widows have now to live and support themselves as best they can, while their 500,000 orphans have nothing before them but a life of poverty, of misery and of woe. The disasters of the battle-field terrible; but the suffering in weeping in the peasant's humble cottage, there is no less in the gilded palaces of the proudest in the land. And such is war, and such is the so-called glory of war. Oh! what a responsibility rests on those who bring it on. Those Kings and Emperors who, for a childish fight, or a matter of private pique, fight over an unborn infant, bring ruin, death and desolation upon thousands of their kind. Some months ago, when the plebiscite was laid before the French people, millions of them pronounced in favor of Napoleon, who thus became the loved monarch of a loving people. Today he has sunk so low as to be completely covered with obloquy. Then he had almost secured the Government of France for himself and his family; to-day he is ignored, and no name is more detested than that of Napoleon. He has had to fly the country, he is no lately ruled, and God send that he may never return. If Emperors and Kings should quarrel, could not some more civilized and merciful way of settling be adopted than the resort to war and bloodshed. It is easy for Kings to declare war against each other, for they never do the fighting themselves, although they accept all the honor. Who has heard, in modern times, of Kings going into the thick of the fight? They very wisely retire from doing so, and invariably choose some sheltered place, at a safe distance beyond the reach of the enemy's guns, from where they can, in perfect security, watch the progress of events, and see their men mowed down like the blades of grass before the scythe. The soldier, and the army of which he is a unit, is nothing more than a machine, to be used by Kings according to their caprice and pleasure. And this is glory; the glory of war. Monarchs care less for their people than they do for of their own spoiled dignity and pride. The foe now outside Paris could secure such a peace and stop the shedding of blood if he desired; but no. He is an implacable and unrelenting enemy, and thousands have yet to be slaughtered. What care monarchs? Their desire is to enter the conquered city in all their pride, and with all the pomp and pageantry they can boast of, so that they may show their power is greater than others, and their arms more successful. Their diplomacy and meetings are nothing more than a game of chess, where each one is trying to checkmate the other. Were they to sit down to-morrow to arrange the map of Europe, would they do it with regard to geographical situation or to the dictates of justice? They most certainly would not. All Govern-

[illegible] Royal dogs learn to tear each other [illegible] others quietly look on until [illegible] to interfere. How do they set to [illegible] present crisis? Why, Russia [illegible] Austria has her eyes open, and her fingers ready to dip into somebody's purse and extract something therefrom; while England, alas! has too many royal daughters to provide for. Many of Her Majesty's daughters are allied to German Princes, but others are yet to be disposed of. The Queen is not, therefore, inclined to interfere until those young ladies are settled and done for. And Napoleon, alas! she stands silently by and scarcely utters a word in support of Peace. If Austria and Prussia and Italy and Spain and England were to say to themselves that there should be no more blood wasted, peace would be declared in twenty-four hours. They had but to say to William, "Enough—back to Berlin," and William would at once have to give the command; "Digbie about, march," and the war was ended. But there is not so much of Christianity among Governments as to induce such peaceful and wise action. There are individually good and honest and upright men—politicians, legislators, diplomatists, soldiers and citizens, but somehow when one enters the council-chamber of nations there seems but very little of Christianity in them. War is a profession is, however, happily dying out, and rioting, riots, disorder, and, of itself, by its own action, bringing on peace far more perfect civilization day by day. The officers of the Prussian has done more to bring it into contrast than the thousands of reasons of a hundred battles. For they, by their skill, bravery, or prowess or strength was not worth one cent, still against their deadly fire. In olden times, when the warriors used the sword and the lance, if was physical power, manly endurance and skill that won the day. Many knights returned from hundreds of battles with but a single scar to remind him of the fray. Today bravery is not worth anything, and endurance and physical strength are of no use. Every man who lists as a soldier carries his life in his hand, and can yield up his life at the first act of land that she carries. Turkey, Austria has her eyes open, and her fingers ready to dip into somebody's purse and extract something therefrom; while England, alas! has too many royal daughters to provide for. REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

An unimportant sale was made at the Exchange on Saturday last (Sept. 24) by JOHNSON & MILLER, as follows: A lot 25.3 by 170.11, located at New-Brighton, Staten Island, on the west side of Castleton-avenue, 50 feet north of Stewart-avenue. The transaction was made on account of a purchaser at the recent sale at that place, who had failed to fulfill his contract, beyond paying the necessary ten per cent. on the auction day. The lot previously sold at $215, was struck off on Saturday for $200.

A review of the transactions of the past week would seem to indicate a little revival of business. Tuesday at the Exchange was a very active day, sales of City property being then made to the amount of $370,700. The principal auctioneers were ROBERT G. MCGUIRE, A. J. BLEECKER, Son & Co., JOHNSON & MILLER and JOSEPH LEVY, and the spectacle, unusual of late at the Exchange, was presented of four auctioneers engaged at the same time. The locations and other particulars in reference to the property disposed of, have already been given in the TIMES' daily reports of transactions effected. The total amount received from public sales at the Exchange, for the week ending Saturday, Sept. 24, is $215,203. The largest sewing by far for a number of weeks past.

Of Brooklyn property, during the week, but one public sale has been made, and then on Friday in that city, by COLE & MURPHY, consisting of the St. Vincent estate, which was disposed of for $22,75. A full report of this transaction was published exclusively in the TIMES of Saturday.

The transfer record for the week of property both in this City and Brooklyn is given below. In comparing the totals with those of the table of the previous week, it will be seen that in this City both the number and mortgaged value of the property conveyed is about the same, while in Brooklyn, although the number of transfers is nineteen in excess, the value of the property represented is about $100,000 less. The following is the table, Saturday, Sept. 17, being the first date given, as the transfers are published the day after their record is made:

	No. New-York.	Value.	No. Brooklyn.	Value.
Saturday	11	$168,750	14	$83,281
Monday	7	141,700	22	94,357
Tuesday	6	160,200	22	61,200
Wednesday	15	211,050	26	102,200
Thursday	10	108,025	20	84,500
Friday	15	224,462	18	82,155
Total	63	$1,124,263	122	$505,693

During the week fifty-one new buildings have been prepared for erection in the City, of which sixteen only are first-class dwellings—a small percentage. It is hardly to be expected, however, that there will be any great activity in the branch of business at present, the market for improved property being too dull to offer great inducements in this line, while, in addition, the lateness of the season exerts its influence in preventing the beginning of this class of work.

In addition to the notes of private sales already published, WATKINSON & CO., No. 885 Fifth-avenue, reports having disposed of the following property during last week:

Four lots on the north-east corner of Fifteenth-street and Sixth-avenue, together 100 feet and 5 inches on the avenue and 108 feet deep, $69,600; No. 62 West Fifteenth-street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, four-story high-stoop brown-stone (Columbia house, 21x55x100, Columbia lease), $27,000; No. 23 West Fifteenth-street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, four-story high-stoop brown-stone house, 18x55x100, (Columbia College lease,) $17,500.

Of suburban sales none have taken place since the last weekly review, and the above comprise the principal events of the market for the time specified. That real estate will improve is confidently believed, but the exact date when the reaction will set in is not yet fixed. The majority of sales which take place are of a legal character, being but little property is being voluntarily placed upon the market. From the sales made, however, one fact is evident, and that is, that while unimproved property continues firm the reverse is the case with lots upon which buildings are already erected. The reason is evident, for with the fall of rents, the decrease in the cost of construction, and the rates given to trade as the price of gold approaches par, it would be futile to expect that much, if any advance will be made on present valuations. On the contrary, holders of property, if they would realize, will be obliged to sacrifice somewhat, unless a speculative demand should arise, in which case the same results will follow, for more than the required amount of property would be offered, and values becoming fixed, the market would soon assume a healthy tone.

In regard to the business of the present week but few announcements are as yet made. At the Exchange several quite important sales will take place to-morrow, and on Friday next the "Greenwich Mills," located on Greenwich and Washington streets, will again be sold. These premises were disposed of on Tuesday of last week to close an interest, and brought over $150,000. The sale on Friday is a legal one, in an action of foreclosure, in which a perfect title will pass.

The sales of country property for the week thus far noticed are as follows: To-morrow, at 1 P. M., on the premises, LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & FLEURY sell at North Orange, N. J., seven very desirable lots, situated on Niven, Linden and Jefferson streets, of that town. The property is a portion of the Everett and Bradshaw estates, and said to be admirably located. The sale is peremptory, the terms liberal, and from present indications the transaction promises to be a successful one. Maps and all necessary particulars can be obtained of the auctioneers, No. 10 Pine-street.

On Thursday, at 2 P. M., on the ground, DUCKER, KETCHAM & CO. will sell the country residence of THOMAS L. BUSHMORE, Esq., situated in Orienta, near Mamaroneck, on Long Island Sound, a modern mansion and a lot of five acres. Also five villa plots, adjoining the same. In addition, by order of executors, the same firm will sell, at the same time and place, the cottage of the late SCHUYLER HALSTEAD, Esq., with outbuildings, all in excellent order, and one acre of ornamental ground. The above property is too well known to require a more extended notice. That the auction will be well attended can hardly fail to be the case, and from its location and other advantages, the result of the sale will probably be a fortunate one. In addition to the above, arrangements for one or two other sales are in progress, due notice of which will be given.

Among the real estate enterprises now before the public, attention is called to that under the control of the Linden Park Association, of which JOSEPH NEWGARDEN is President. The property to be sold is located on Staten Island, at Linden Park, the first station on the railway from Vanderbilt Landing. The lots are already laid out, and the manner of their disposition is a novel and a fair one. A price-list is prepared with the value of each lot placed opposite its number. To the Park free excursions are given each Monday and Thursday, and those who desire to purchase have thus the opportunity to fully examine before making an investment. As fast as sold the lots are checked off the list. The prices average from $50 to $200 per lot, according to location, and the terms are $10 payable monthly, without interest. The project was started on the 5th inst., and since that time about 150 lots have been disposed of. Tickets for the semi-weekly excursion, and other particulars can be obtained at No. 37 Park-row, the office of the Association.

8 per Cent Interest

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.
Principal and Interest Payable in Gold.

The First Mortgage Eight Per Cent. Gold Bonds of the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY are for sale by the undersigned. Price, 97½ and interest. The business of road doubled in $1,000,000 in 1869 of road, of which 97 miles are completed, and the grading of the balance finished. Within the year rail and materials are on the track to complete it.

This road, completed and about being finished, is united with railroad stock, lands, property of great magnitude, and franchises, as mortgaged to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in trust for the security of these bonds. This property has a value more than double the amount of this mortgage. The net earnings of the Company are consistently on the increase, and are in excess of the amount required to pay the interest on these bonds. The payment of the interest and principal is therefore fully secured. The bonds are in denominations of $1,000 and $500. Interest payable semi-annually in New-York, London or Frankfort on the Main. We unreservedly recommend them, and will furnish maps and pamphlets upon application.

TWEED'S LAMBS.

Alarming Preparations for Repeating on Election Day.

Hosts of Thieves, Gamblers and Prize-Fighters Being Rallied for the Fray—Over Thirteen Hundred Sinecures Provided Within the Past Six Weeks—Some of the Means by Which the People are to be Betrayed.

The lords and masters of the Tammany Democracy have promulgated the edict that all the rowdies and vagabonds of New-York, the gamblers, the sneak-thieves and the shoulder-hitters, shall live in clover, and that the taxpayers must pay the bill, and work hard to support in idleness and debauchery that portion of our criminal population who hesitate at no crime—not excepting even murder itself, and who, by physical force and brutal conduct, make our City elections the burlesques that they have been for years.

SINECURES FOR THE ROWDIES.

It has ever been a dodge of Tammany Hall to put a number of men on the City pay-roll just before election. This year the dodge has been resorted to more extensively than ever before. Within the past six weeks more than thirteen hundred men have been placed on the pay-roll, and not one-fourth of the number ever pretend to do work. But they do as much as is contracted for, and that is to fight the battle of Tammany previous to election; and on election day to be on hand at the polling-places to repeat, stuff boxes, or knock down and saw-off any one inimical to them. It is in this manner that Tammany keeps her followers together. They are a kind of whippers-in but in order to keep them under control and within call, the City of New-York is robbed for the purpose of paying them. Not satisfied with the multitude of rowdies and bad characters of all grades whom Tammany keeps in permanent sinecures, she must increase the number on the election approaches in order to prevent her defeat by a fair election and a free use of the franchise. Her agents scour the purlieus of the City to hunt up the very worst characters; to find out men who deem murder no crime, and to bringagain, for a time, to the surface, the most villainous portion of the population that yet remains outside of State Prison.

PRISON-BIRDS TO THE RESCUE.

The additions now being made to the camp of Tammany average about fifty a day, and will continue at the same rate up to election day. Messrs. Twiggs & Co. are indefatigable in their efforts to obtain men of the right stamp. They have, up to the present, succeeded admirably; for when did Tammany's tribes fail to bring to her assistance the scoundrels who disgrace New-York? The rank and file of Tammany's outlaw brigade are paid $3 per day, besides unlimited orders for bad whisky. These statements are not made for political effect; they are not intended as sensational, nor are they published in the TIMES without first having been proven true, and based upon the most reliable authority. We have the names of the parties referred to, and, if necessary, shall publish them; and further, any reader of the TIMES who may be doubtful, need only look for himself, and a very slight examination will at once confirm everything here asserted. The Eighth Ward sends a very large quota to the outlaw brigade, and they are received with open arms on the recommendation of a certain arrant Senator.

EXTRA MEN ON THE PARK.

Many people, when passing through the various parks of the City, praise the Commissioners for their supposed untiring energy and for the improvements made; but these innocent individuals should take a peep behind the scenes and view things as they really exist. There, the chicanery of the trick would become apparent. Why! the parks and all other improvements are merely "blinds"—"blinds" of the worst kind. They are gotten up as pretexts for raising and stealing more money—to pay the scoundrels already referred to, and to add to the millions already accumulated by the chief patriots of Tammany Hall. There is another jocose improvement (!) being made now—we refer to the lamp-posts, which were always ugly, but are now being made hideous at a cost of nearly $1,000 per day. They are undergoing a process miscalled "painting," but in reality not as good, or pleasing to the eye, as whitewashing. This work was commenced about the time the rain began last week, in the hopes, as is supposed, that the showers would wash out today's work, that it may be done over again to-morrow, for the three hundred men employed at it must be kept on at all hazards until after the election. Tammany must keep her hounds within the leash, otherwise they are sure to be obstreperous and unleash to their commanders.

THE QUALIFICATIONS OF A SINECURE.

In the offices of the Boards of Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen there are now employed nearly seventy-five persons, the greater number of whom draw salaries varying from $1,200 to $5,000 per year. They are nicknamed clerks, but more than one-half of them can neither read nor write. Nor is there any necessity that they should have undergone so much education. They travel on their muscle, and that is what Tammany wants, and no "larning" at all. Not many months ago, we are informed by an employe, there were twenty-seven men drawing pay as clerks in the office of the Board of Aldermen, and two out of the whole number performed all the duties required. Thus twenty-five out of twenty-seven received large salaries for doing nothing. It was just as well, for the majority of them had never taken degrees at college, nor even passed examination in the abstruse and difficult sciences of reading and writing. The Library in the City Hall is taken care of by highly-educated gentlemen, some of whom cannot read the names printed in large letters on the backs of the books. They are paid large salaries, and do nothing whatever in return for the amount of money so stolen from the people. We also find in the City Hall offices men drawing two and three thousand dollars a year as engrossing clerks, who could not for the life of them write their own names. They are paid as engrossers, and set in an entirely different, and to Tammany more useful, capacity. They strike out straight from the chest strong and heavy, and are, therefore, worth a dozen genuine engrossing clerks.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PICTURE.

While the rowdies and the shoulder-hitters are paid regularly, and kept constantly in whisky and cigars, the honest few, who do work, cannot get their money without considerable loss. Some short time ago, an appropriation of $600,000 more was voted for the New Court-house. The money was drawn, and yet there are poor men, having large families to support, engaged in the building, who have not received a cent of pay for months; nor will they until months after the election, unless they submit to the imposition of agents of the Ring who will cash their vouchers at a rate that would have brought a blush to the cheeks of Shylock himself. An immense amount of money is made in this way, for numbers of the employes cannot afford to be so long out of money, and are obliged, through want and fear, to accept any terms dictated to them by the aforesaid agents.

THE STREET CLEANING AND OTHER JOBS.

In order that Tammany leaders may be enabled to make millions in a few years, and also to maintain her Outlaw Brigade, it is only reasonable to expect that many nice jobs should be gotten up; and when election approaches the way must be smoothed and prepared, so that the number of jobs shall be increased to meet the emergency. The new Boulevards are fertile grounds in this respect, and are much-vaulted. No law is recognized in their construction; various changes, improvements, recharges, sewerage, and so forth, and so forth, ad infinitum. The liberal-minded politicians utter and slash as many bills as they desire, and liberal-minded guardians of New-York cash them, of course, with pleasure. New-York is rich; therefore New-York must stand it. In the matter of street cleaning, one contractor was doing it and willing to continue at the liberal allowance of $500,000 per year; but the good-natured City deemed the sum too small, and increased it by the trifle of a quarter of a million only. What became of this quarter of a million?

TAXING FOR A REPUBLICAN EXPEDITION.

The order has gone forth for the usual assessment to pay Tammany expenses in the approaching election campaign. The firemen are the first to receive the order. The firemen are called on for $10 each. The City Court-house and City Hall personnel office are politely requested to hand over a month's pay, and in the various other departments, the number, the control of the "Ring," Preparations are being made to this commandeering men whose votes are controlled either by [illegible] or by the money stolen from the City treasury.

THE FIFTEENTH STONE ON THE REGISTER'S BUILDING.

Another nice little job (?) were well to refer to is that additional story to the Register's building. And by that story "hangs a tale." The building was, for many years, deemed capable of holding two such fat individuals as DICK and MIKE of the clan CONNOLLY. DICK, the shrinkage of the two, vacated the premises to give MIKE more room. Still, there was not sufficient space, and eventually the aid of ABNY GARVAY was called in, and in a very short space of time $300,000 disappeared like a flash of lightning on that one story. The whole building from base to roof is, probably, worth $100,000. Officials in the Register's office, when questioned on the matter, opened their eyes in extreme surprise at the idea of their being a mod at all on the building, but the idea of a new story having been added was entirely beyond their comprehension. Nobody knew anything about the new—not even the "Big Judge" himself. The figures were too large to be grappled by weak intellects, and their ready addition and multiplication was too heavy for mind or fist, and "too wearing on the minds" of the contractors of such a tenement.

CONCLUSION—"THE FUTURE," &c.

In conclusion, for the present we would ask the respectable portion of Tammany, who cannot have failed to notice the innumerable well-dressed "strangers" who continually ornament the outside of whisky-shops, gambling-houses, and other disreputable dens, to look at the Tammany polling-booths on election day, and they will find the very same individuals mounting guard. But the Republicans are ready to counteract any such proceeding to contract. Their duty and appearance at the polls is a full explanation of how it may obtain their livelihood. They belong to the staff of Tammany, and Tammany supports them in idleness and all kinds of vice and debauchery. We think, and we feel so sure, that the masses of our City are made to foot the bills, and get in return nothing but false figures and wicked men in places of power.

THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

Mass-Meeting in Cooper Institute—Addresses of R. E. C. Judson, Rev. Stephen Merritt and L. W. Butler—The Anti-Dram-Shop Party Answered.

There was a large gathering of temperance people in Cooper Institute hall last evening, to hear Mr. Judson (Ned Buntline) answer the arguments set forth on the previous Sabbath evening, in the same place, against prohibition by Mr. LEE. Among the other attractions last evening, was Mr. PHILIP PHILLIPS, who sang in his own inimitable style, the songs, "What are you going to do brother?" "Your Mission," and "Scatter Seeds of Kindness," together with others, in which the audience joined. Rev. S. MERRITT, G.W.P., presided, and introduced the chief speaker, R. E. C. JUDSON, who discoursed eloquently on "Political Temperance, and a View of Temperance Labor at the Present Time." The field of the Temperance laborer and his work, he said, differs very greatly from every other, and there is much more need now than ever that Temperance men of all creeds and callings should unite and engage heartily in promoting the Temperance cause. Election times are fruitful seasons for making drunkards, and politicians are ever on the watch to entrap the unwary into their net. They organize target and other excursions, or speeches, or meetings, not to do good, shelter widows and orphans, but to add to their number. The time has long passed by when men who sought after office in the State or nation should possess other qualifications than corruption and villainy, which are now requisite. Last Sabbath he said Mr. Lee stood on this platform and made a temperance address, in which he acknowledged that he was a man of one idea, and that his party—the anti-dram-shop party—had not the second. And this idea is to break down the dram shops. He (LEE) did not believe in prohibitory laws, because they could not be enforced. But he (Mr. Judson) knew that prohibitory laws against thieves and burglars and murderers and other criminals are enforced, and they could be enforced also against intemperance and the sale of intoxicating drinks. The late Democratic Convention introduced a temperance clause into its platform, asserting that prohibitory laws are in violation of personal rights. They illustrated the character of their party and the soundness of their platform by their ravages along the railroad lines going to and returning from the Convention. The Republican Convention unanimously uttered noble words when they said that inasmuch as the power is already invested in the majority of voters in any city, town or county in the State to regulate the sale of alcoholic liquors, a corresponding power is inferentially invested in them, and it is their right to exercise it to prohibit the sale. Together, the speakers defended President COLFAX from aspersions and insinuations cast upon him by Mr. LEE, and though he had never advocated the Republican Party and never sought or held office, except in defence of his country, he was now going to do all he could to elect Colfax. Mr. Lee, the Republican Party, because that party had given the City the Metropolitan Excise law, which, though not as strictly enforced as it might have been, had yet been acknowledged blessing. The dram-shops and beer-gardens were publicly opened on the Sabbath while they were not, if, as they are now, He would help the Republican Party, because it had placed at the head of its ticket a staunch temperance man and a Christian. He would help that party again because their only hope for the future was in that party which had aided them in the past. It is in the power of the Democratic party to drive this and other portions of the community to drive this party from their midst. He (Judson) had looked over the tax-lists, and made inquiries from parties well informed, and had found that ninety-nine out of every one hundred persons engaged in the rum-traffic, whether as brewers, distillers or dealers, did not own the buildings in which they carried on their business. It was within the power of the Christian owners of these places to refuse to let them for such purposes. A large majority of the employing public are also non-drinking men. They could suppress intemperance by refusing to employ any man who is addicted to intoxication or who drinks. But if we cannot have general prohibition, he was in favor of local prohibition, and urged his hearers to sustain the Republican Party, through whom alone they might expect such blessings.

Mr. JUDSON's address was frequently applauded. At its close Miss HOWARD took exception to the speaker's remarks, and said that by uniting with the Republican Party they would shut out a great many temperance Democrats, and she had heard sounder prohibitory doctrines proclaimed from Father Matthew Temperance platforms than from many of our American organizations.

Mr. JUDSON, responding, said that as the Republican Party had come out fair and square for temperance, the temperance people should sustain it fully. He did not believe that a single F. M. T. A. B. Society would break away from the Democratic Party or from the leadings of their principles by any offer that they could make to them.

After brief addresses by Mr. MERRITT and Mr. BUTLER, who said that the liquor consumed in the world every day would fill a canal 4 feet deep, 16 feet wide and 120 miles long, the meeting adjourned.

Funeral of George R. Jackson.

The funeral of the late GEORGE R. JACKSON took place, yesterday afternoon, at St. Ann's Church, in Eighteenth-street, near Fifth-avenue. The interior of the church was draped in deep mourning. The ceremonies, which were conducted according to the Episcopal form, were solemn and imposing. The inside of the church and vicinity was thronged with the members of various societies of which the deceased was a member. At 3½ P. M. the body, in a costly mahogany coffin, was borne through the church, and placed upon the altar, where, at the close of the ceremonies, the 5,000 or 6,000 persons present took a last view of the dead.

At 4 P. M. Rev. Dr. GALLAUDET ascended the pulpit, and delivered a touching and eloquent address on the life of the deceased. He traced his career from the time he entered the struggle for life as an humble apprentice in our great City, until he acquired wealth and influence. At the time of his death Mr. JACKSON held several offices of trust and responsibility, although he persistently refused to hold public office. He was at one time one of the Commissioners of the Harlem Bridge. A stirring business man of incorruptible integrity, liberal-minded and benevolent, he was a warm, genial-souled friend, whose traits of character endeared him to all with whom he associated. Even his imperfections indicated the sterling qualities of his great nature. The remains were placed in a vault of the Second-street Cemetery. This afternoon they will be interred in Greenwood Cemetery.

Explosion on the East River Bridge—The Damage Slight.

About 7½ yesterday morning an explosion, imperiling months of engineering labor, occurred in the Brooklyn caisson of the East River bridge. The cause, as near as could be ascertained, was the presence of an extra amount of air in the lower chamber, rendered destructive by the absence of the usual quantity of water in the shore or lower excavation in the chamber. The shaft through which the dredging is done, was pretty thoroughly shaken, and the machine dredging bucket, weighing 1,800 pounds, was shivered into pieces, and thrown at least twenty feet into the air. Its pieces were then scattered for quite a little space were enterlained by the engineers that some permanent injury had been done to the entire structure. Investigation, however, showed that, apart from the bucket shaking, by which a few of the upper blocks had been moved, there was no great damage done. Had the accident occurred just half an hour later, the probabilities are that some lives would have been lost, for even on the Saturday there were at least fifteen persons employed in the spot. A number of people, however, were so greatly frightened by the ludicrous quantities of small stones and mud that were thrown up and scattered all over the surrounding buildings.

POLITICAL.

GENERAL NOTES.

The Democrats have nominated W. A. HAINEBY for Congress from the Third Alabama District.

The Democrats have nominated ANTON KLUSS, of Green Bay, as their candidate for Congress in the Fifth Wisconsin District.

We have cheering accounts of Republican prospects, and Democratic apathy from North, East, and Central Alabama.

The Republicans will nominate a candidate for Congress in the Fourth Virginia District on the 5th inst., at Danville, in that State.

Our colored Minister to Hayti is a native of Philadelphia. The Press of that city wishes the fact to be made known.

JULIUS AVERY, of La Salle, has been nominated for Congress by the Democracy of the Sixth Illinois District.

On the 30th inst. the Democrats will assemble in convention at Augusta, Ga., and nominate a candidate for Congress from the Fifth District of that State. It was formerly represented by ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

It is authenticated that the Otsego County delegates to the Convention to be held at Cooperstown, in this State, on the 5th of next month, are in favor of the nomination of Mr. S. SHOCK for Congress in the Nineteenth District.

ALEXANDER MITCHELL, the nominee of the Democracy in the First Congressional District of Wisconsin has once before contested the same seat with a Republican. The Janesville Wisconsin says: "Those voters who remember the time when we thought he was entitled to it, and we feel so sure that his qualifications for the position are any better now than then."

The Democrats of Kentucky have called a State Convention, to meet Jan. 7, 1871, to nominate candidates for Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Attorney-General, Auditor, Treasurer, Register of the Land Office, and Superintendent of Public Instruction. The election does not take place till next August.

The recent Republican Convention at Richmond is spoken of by the Virginia State Journal in the following terms: "No unprejudiced spectator who attended the Convention of the delegates of the Republican Party which assembled yesterday in this city, and performed its work with so much wisdom and in a spirit so harmonious and so free from bitterness, such as will in political gatherings of this kind, would have pronounced it anything else than a true representative body of the people of Virginia. We mean of the entire people—from the highest to the lowest, the richest to the poorest."

"The people of the Twenty-eighth Congressional District of this State," says the Rochester Express, "are called upon to elect a double delegation to Congress at the ensuing election, one for the full term, and another to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. NOAH DAVIS. A Congressional contest has for years been a source of dread to honest and intelligent Republicans, for it has been the signal for unseemly strife, for self-seeking, and for corruption, which has sometimes defeated the nomination by. The district is reliably and surely Republican—so surely, indeed, that a nomination has always been considered equivalent to an election. The result has been that scheming politicians have devoted all their energies and to no small amount of money, to manipulating town and ward caucuses, and securing the nomination and leaving the election to follow as a matter of course."

NEW-YORK STATE.

The Closing Political Events of September—Nominations for Congress and Assembly.

On the 27th inst. a Democratic Convention will meet at Schenectady to nominate a candidate for Congress from the Eighteenth District. A Republican County Convention will meet at Syracuse to nominate candidates for Sheriff, County Clerk, County Judge, Superintendent of the Poor and Justice of the Sessions; and the Democrats will meet at the Delavan House, Albany, and nominate a candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court.

On the 28th inst., the Republican electors of the County of Tioga will assemble at Owego to nominate candidates for County Clerk, District Attorney, two Superintendents of the Poor, Coroner, Special County Judge, Justice of Sessions, and Member of Assembly. A Republican Convention of the County of Steuben will be held at Bath to nominate candidates for Sheriff, County Treasurer, Superintendent of the Poor, Justice of Sessions, and three Coroners; and a Republican Convention of the County of Schuyler will be to nominate a candidate for Assembly in the Tenth District of Dutchess County.

On the 29th inst. the Democrats will meet in Convention at Poughkeepsie and nominate a candidate for Congress in the Twelfth Congressional District. The Republicans of the Twenty-ninth District will assemble in Convention at Hornellsville and nominate a candidate for Congress.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Congressional Nominations by the Working Men of St. Louis—Removal of Officers by Gov. McClurg of Missouri—Municipal Election at Nashville, Tenn.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 25.—A meeting of working men, last night, called by the members of the National Executive Committee for Missouri, nominated EMERTUS WELLS, as candidate of the Labor Reform Party for Congress, from the First District. The platform of the National Labor Congress, held at Cincinnati last year, was adopted....Gov. MCCLURG, yesterday afternoon, removed Col. MEYERS, Col. HEGLWARTH and Capt. HUDNER, Police Commissioners, of this city. Serious charges were made against these gentlemen, which caused their removal. It is also asserted they were removed for political reasons, they being liberal Republicans.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 25.—The annual municipal election, yesterday, passed off quietly. The vote was light. MORRIS (Democrat) was re-elected Mayor by 2,600 majority, over ALLEN, (Republican.) Both branches of the City Council are unanimously Democratic.

Fumigation on Marble.

The art of painting on marble in durable colors, if ever known, has been lost. For years past, Dr. ASA HILL, of Norwalk, Conn., has been experimenting in this matter, and with the aid of Mr. W. H. MILLER, a well-known artist of this City, has at last brought the art, if not to perfection, at least so near it that ultimate success is no longer doubtful. Yesterday we were shown at Mr. MILLER'S studio in Dodworth's Building, Broadway, some thirty specimens of painting on marble—figures, landscapes and marine pieces—which in brilliancy of color were equal to oil-paintings. The pigments when once fixed are permanent, and cannot be injured by the action of the atmosphere, water or by acids. If desirable, the surface of the marble can be polished.

The colors used in painting on marble are mixed neither in oil nor in water. The method of preparation is at present the secret of the inventors. Neither do the ordinary processes be used in laying on the colors. This at first presented an almost insurmountable difficulty, but, like all others, it was at last overcome, and a substitute for a brush was found in a material which at first sight would seem but little likely to be available for such a purpose. The chief difficulty, however, was the fading and change of the colors first used. Blues turned into greens, yellows into blacks, and browns into reddish purples. This difficulty has also been almost entirely surmounted, and now, with the exception of a strong permanent green, all the other colors have been obtained.

No effort has yet been made to introduce this new branch of art to the public, though it is thought that the permanency of the colors and the little liability to decay of the material on which they are spread, will render marble paintings very desirable for the decoration of the exterior walls of public and private residences, for churches, and also for monuments.

Suabian Festival at Jones' Wood—A Three Days' Frolic of Our German Citizens.

Today the annual festival of the Suabians, designated as the Cannstadt Volksfest, will commence at Jones' Wood, and will be continued to-morrow and on Wednesday. This Cannstadt Volks Fest was originally an agricultural festival of the Suabian peasantry, held annually at Cannstadt, in Wurtemburg, which is generally patronised in person by the King of Wurtemburg. Some years ago it was introduced here by a society of Suabians, known as the Cannstadt Volksfest Verein. The festivities of this society have become very popular among our Suabian population, and among the German residents in general; and a large gathering and a vast amount of fun and enjoyment may be expected to-morrow. Wood Station the next three days. A spirited programme of popular plays and exercises for the young and old has been presented, including a carnival procession on the second day (to-morrow) of characters representing the WILLIAM "Gut Fritz," Prince Fantasie, LE GRAND, Count Bismarck, Gen. Moltke, Count Bismarck, accompanied by a splendid cortege of Bavarians, forming the first division of the procession. The second division will be composed of the peasantry in national costumes. After this picturesque procession has taken place there will be presented a grand tableau, representing the coronation of King WILLIAM as Emperor of Germany, amid a scene of allegorical representations of the various sections of Germany. At the entrance of the Park a triumphal arch has been erected, and the wood has been otherwise tastefully decorated. In the centre of the grounds a column with decorations of fruit, designated as the Feen Saule, has been erected, which forms the main feature of the decorations. In the evening of each of the three days of the festival the wood will be brilliantly illuminated.

Shortly before 12 o'clock, on Saturday night, the fourth floor of the carpet warehouse of Messrs. The damage will amount to $6,000 on the stock of wall-papers and carpets, and about $4,000 on the building. There was no one, save the watchman, in the building at the time, and no person was injured.

What is a Christian? The temperance cause in its relation to the churches; house and family religion; revivals, how best promoted and how made permanent in their results? Systematic benevolence. The Association was in session two days.

Friday night it was discovered that Long Island City manufacturers were stealing water from a Brooklyn hydrant, having run a hose hose across the bridge from Greenpoint to Hunters' Point. Tanks for a number of manufactories were filled and a large quantity of water wasted, the hose being old and leaky. It is reported that the Hunters' Point relies on this one hydrant for most of its water.

NEW-JERSEY.

About 3 o'clock, Sunday morning, a fire was discovered in some stables, on Broome-street, Newark, and though the Fire Department did all in their power to save the buildings, three stables and a carriage-house were totally destroyed. One stable, and the carriage-house, belonged to CHAS. RADEMACHER. He puts his loss, in buildings, sleighs, carriage, &c., at $3,500. He is a horse dealer, and had several animals in the barns, which were saved. He was insured for $600. One remaining stable belonged to R. LEWIS, and one to JOHN JAGER, valued, each, with contents destroyed, at about $1,500. They were partly insured. An old man, named HENRY BRESSINON, living in Broome-street, was arrested on suspicion of having fired the buildings, but the evidence being insufficient, he was discharged.

FURNIVAL and POWERS, the Excelsior Park rioters, were sentenced at Hackensack on Saturday afternoon. POWERS received a sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment in the State Prison and $300 fine; FURNIVAL was sentenced to twelve months in prison and to pay a fine of $200.

Early yesterday morning two Germans, JACOB HUFF and HENRY SADLER, became involved in a quarrel, in Wayne-street, Jersey City, which resulted in violent words and blows. During the fight HUFF drew a knife, and attempted to plunge it into the breast of SADLER. The latter parried the blow and attempted to defend himself, and had his wrist nearly cut off by the blow. He ran home immediately, and had the wound dressed by a physician, who stopped the flow of blood in time to save the life of his patient. HUFF was arrested, and held for examination.

Although there is a law on the statute books forbidding it, the beer and liquor saloons of Newark are open as regularly on Sunday as on any other day. Some few close the front doors, but do not attempt to conceal the fact that their places are open. Even on William-street, directly opposite the Police Head-quarters, they pipe their Sunday trade as openly as in any other portion of the city, and no attempt is made to enforce the law against it.

The members of the BEAUVELT family held a meeting at a building owned by J. D. BEAUVELT, in Paterson-street, Paterson, on Saturday afternoon, to appoint a committee to prosecute the claims of the family against the Government of Holland. They "resolved" to raise money to obtain proof of their claims, and two members of the family, S. C. BEAUVELT and JOHN H. BEAUVELT were selected to go to Holland and look up the case.

Yesterday morning PATRICK REENAN was arrested as an accomplice in the assault made by PATRICK DONAHOE and PATRICK EGAN upon PATRICK KELLY. The three men were held to await the result of EGAN'S injuries, bail being refused. The injuries inflicted upon EGAN are very serious, and it was at first supposed that his recovery was impossible.

Among the crowd which usually gather about the Centre Market, in Newark, on Saturday nights, a traveling vendor from New-York appeared last Saturday night, and on lighting his lamp and mounting a box, he proceeded to sell those little instruments which, if placed in the mouth, can be made to represent the notes of a horn, the whistling of a [illegible] &c. A crowd gathered, and some time elapsed before the fellow found the peddler. They threw him down and trampled him under their feet. Detective HAGARTY, seeing that the man was likely to be killed, rushed in and rescued him. One of the prisoners was immediately discharged, and the other, CHAS. N. RIZNER, was sent to jail for ten days for drunkenness and breach of the peace.

About 3½ o'clock yesterday afternoon, a fire was discovered in the carpenter-shop of the Erie Railroad, on North-street, Jersey City. The shop, with tools or some value, were entirely consumed. The shop was an old one, and the loss about $600, is principally that of workmen who had tools stored there. The fire originated in the waste from feed boxes, which was saturated with oil, and very combustible.
